PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION.

THE general use which has followed the first publication of American Poems confirms the editor in his belief that such a book has a real place in our educational system, and he is gratified by the wide and cordial recognition which it has received. The few criticisms which have been offered seem mainly to have sprung from a hasty consideration of its intention. It does not profess to be a representative volume of American poetry, nor, in a comprehensive way, of the poets whose works are included in it, but, because the poems are of themselves worthy and the group is American in origin and tone, the book has a significance which justifies its title. The brief sketches of the authors contained in it were necessarily limited to the main facts of their literary life, but the editor, in reviewing his work under the more favorable conditions of a completed book and lapse of time, perceives with renewed and stronger feeling how pure and admirable is the spirit in which these American poets have wrought, how high an ideal has been before them, and with what grace and beauty their lives have reinforced their poems! Surely, the poets have given

America no greater gift than their own characters and lofty lives.

Scarcely any attempt at criticism was made of our writers in this volume; in the companion volume of American Prose, where all but one of the poets appear again, the opportunity has been taken to call attention more specifically to the art, as here to the biographic details. The two volumes will be found to complement each other.

January, 1880.

PREFACE.

This volume of American Poems has been prepared with special reference to the interests of young people, both at school and at home. Reading-books and popular collections of poetry contain many of the shorter and well-known poems of the authors represented in this book, but the scope of such collections does not generally permit the introduction of the longer poems. It is these poems, and, with a slight exception, these only, that make up this volume. The power to read and enjoy poetry is one of the finest results of education, but it cannot be attained by exclusive attention to short poems; there is involved in this power the capacity for sustained attention, the remaining with the poet upon a long flight of imagination, the exercise of the mind in bolder sweep of thought. Moreover, the familiarity with long poems produces greater power of appreciation when the shorter ones are taken up. It is much to take deep breaths of the upper air, to fill the lungs with a good draught of poetry, and unless one accompanies the poet in his longer reaches, he fails to know what poetry can give him.

In making the selection for this volume a very simple principle has been followed. It was desired to make the book an agreeable introduction to the pleasures of poetry, and, by confining it to American poetry of the highest order, to give young people in America the most natural acquaintance with literature. These poets are our interpreters. All but one are still living, so that the poetry is contemporaneous and appeals through familiar forms; as far as possible narrative poems have been chosen, and, in the arrangement of authors, regard has been had to degrees of difficulty, the more involved and subtle forms of poetry following the simpler and more direct. Throughout, the book has been conceived in a spirit which welcomes poetry as a noble delight, not as a grammatical exercise or elocutionary task.

With the same intention the critical apparatus has been treated in a literary rather than in a pedagogical way. The editor has imagined himself reading aloud, and stopping now and then to explain a phrase, to clear an allusion, or to give a suggestion as to similar forms in literature. Since several of the poems are semi-historical in character, the historic basis has been carefully pointed out, and hints have been given for further pursuit of the subjects treated. Words, though obsolete or archaic, are not explained when the dictionary account is sufficient. A brief sketch of the author precedes each section.

It is strongly hoped that the book will be accepted by schools as a contribution to that very important work in which teachers are engaged, of giving to their pupils an interest in the best literature, a love for pure and engaging forms of art. If, with all our drill and practice in reading during the years of school-life, children leave their schools with no taste for good reading, and no familiarity with those higher forms of literature that have grown out of the very life which they are living, it must be questioned whether the time given to reading has been most wisely employed.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW was born in Portland, Maine, February 27, 1807. He was a classmate of Hawthorne at Bowdoin College, graduating there in the class of 1825. He began the study of law in the office of his father, Hon. Stephen Longfellow; but receiving shortly the appointment of professor of modern languages at Bowdoin, he devoted himself after that to literature, and to teaching in connection with literature. Before beginning his work at Bowdoin he increased his qualifications by travel and study in Europe, where he stayed three years. Upon his return he gave his lectures on modern languages and literature at the college, and wrote occasionally for the North American Review and other periodicals. The first volume which he published, exclusive of text-books, was Coplas de Mañrique, a translation of Spanish verse, introduced by an Essay on the Moral and Devotional Poetry of Spain. This was issued in 1833, but has not been kept in print as a separate work. The introduction appears as a chapter in Outre-Mer, a reflection of his European life and travel. the first of his prose writings. In 1835 he was invited to succeed Mr. George Ticknor as professor of modern languages and literature at Harvard College, and again went to Europe for preparatory study, giving especial attention to Germany and the Scandinavian countries. He held his professorship until 1854, but continued to live in Cambridge until his death, March 24, 1882, occupying a house known from a former occupant as the Craigie house, and also as Washington's headquarters, that general having so used it while organizing the army that held Boston in siege at the beginning of the Revolution. Everett, Sparks, and Worcester, the lexicographer, at one time or another lived in this house, and here Longfellow wrote most of his works.

In 1839 appeared Hyperion, a Romance, which, with more narrative form than Outre-Mer, like that gave the results of a poet's entrance into the riches of the Old World In the same year was published Voices of the Night, a little volume containing chiefly poems and translations which had been printed separately in periodicals. The Psalm of Life, perhaps the best known of Longfellow's short poems, was in this volume, and here too were The Beleaguered City and Footsteps of Angels. Ballads and other Poems appeared at the close of 1841 and Poems on Slavery in 1842; The Spanish Student, a play in three acts, in 1843; The Belfry of Bruges and other Poems in 1846; Evangeline in 1847; Kavanagh, a Tale, in prose, in 1849. Besides the various volumes comprising short poems, the list of Mr. Longfellow's works includes The Golden Legend, The Song of Hiawatha, The Courtship of Miles Standish, Tales of a Wayside Inn, The New England Tragedies, and a translation of Dante's Divina Commedia. Mr. Longfellow's literary life began in his college days, and he wrote poems almost to the day of his death. A classification of his poems and longer works would be an interesting task, and would help to disclose the wide range of his sympathy and taste; a collection of the metres which he has used would show the versatility of his art, and similar studies would lead one to discover the many countries and ages to which he went for subjects. It would not be difficult to gather from the volume of Longfellow's poems hints of personal experience, that biography of the heart which is of more worth to us than any record, however full, of external change and adventure. Such hints may be found, for example, in the early lines, To the River Charles, which may be compared with his recent Three Friends of Mine, IV., V.; in A Gleam of Sunshine, To a Child, The Day is Done, The Fire of Driftwood, Resignation, The Open Window, The Ladder of St. Augustine, My Lost Youth, The Children's Hour. Weariness, and other poems; not that we are to take all sentiments and statements made in the first person as the poet's, for often the form of the poem is so far dramatic that the poet is assuming a character not necessarily his own, but the recurrence of certain strains, joined with personal allusions, helps one to penetrate the slight veil with which the poet, here as elsewhere, half conceals and half reveals himself. The friendly associations of the poet may also be discovered in several poems directly addressed to persons or distinctively alluding to them, and the reader will find it pleasant to construct the companionship of the poet out of such poems as The Herons of Elmwood, To William E. Channing, The Fiftieth Birthday of Agassiz, To Charles Sumner, the Prelude to Tales of a Wayside Inn, Hawthorne, and other poems.

The most complete biography of the poet is that in three volumes by his brother Samuel Longfellow; this work contains extracts from Journals and Correspondence, a bibliography, portraits, facsimiles, and other illustrations, and a very full index. The fullest edition of his writings is the Riverside Edition in eleven volumes, two being prose writings, six poetical, and three the translation of Dante. These volumes are fully furnished with introductions, notes, and indexes. The most comprehensive single volume edition of the poetical works is the Cambridge Edition, which is equipped with notes and indexes. All of these works are issued by the publishers of this volume.

EVANGELINE: A TALE OF ACADIE.

HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION.

THE country now known as Nova Scotia, and called formerly Acadie by the French, was in the hands of the French and English by turns until the year 1713, when, by the Peace of Utrecht, it was ceded by France to Great Britain, and has ever since remained in the possession of the English. But in 1713 the inhabitants of the peninsula were mostly French farmers and fishermen, living about Minas Basin and on Annapolis River, and the English government exercised only a nominal control over them. It was not till 1749 that the English themselves began to make settlements in the country, and that year they laid the foundations of the town of Halifax. A jealousy soon sprang up between the English and French settlers, which was deepened by the great conflict which was impending between the two mother countries; for the treaty of peace at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1748, which confirmed the English title to Nova Scotia, was scarcely more than a truce between the two powers which had been struggling for ascendency during the beginning of the century. The French engaged in a long controversy with the English respecting the boundaries of Acadie, which had been defined by the treaties in somewhat general terms, and intrigues were carried on with the Indians, who were generally in sympathy with the French, for the annovance of the English settlers. The Acadians were allied to the French by blood and by religion, but they claimed to have the rights of neutrals, and that these rights had been granted to them by previous English officers of the crown. The one point of special dispute was the oath of allegiance demanded of the Acadians by the English. This they refused to take, except in a form modified to excuse them from bearing arms against the French. The demand was repeatedly made, and evaded with constant ingenuity and persistency. Most of the Acadians were probably simpleminded and peaceful people, who desired only to live undisturbed upon their farms; but there were some restless spirits, especially among the young men, who compromised the reputation of the community, and all were very much under the influence of their priests, some of whom made no secret of their bitter hostility to the English, and of their determination to use every means to be rid of them.

As the English interests grew and the critical relations between the two countries approached open warfare, the question of how to deal with the Acadian problem became the commanding one of the colony. There were some who coveted the rich farms of the Acadians; there were some who were inspired by religious hatred; but the prevailing spirit was one of fear for themselves from the near presence of a community which, calling itself neutral, might at any time offer a convenient ground for hostile attack. Yet to require these people to withdraw to Canada or Louisburg would be to strengthen the hands of the French, and make these neutrals determined enemies. The colony finally resolved, without consulting the home government, to remove the Acadians to other parts of North America, distributing them through the colonies in such a way as to preclude any concert amongst the scattered families by which they should return to Acadia. To do this required quick and secret preparations. There were at the service of the English governor a number of New England troops, brought thither for the capture of the forts lying in the debatable land about the head of the Bay of Fundy. These were under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel John Winslow, of Massachusetts, a great-grandson of Governor Edward Winslow, of Plymouth, and to this gentleman and Captain Alexander Murray was intrusted the task of removal. They were instructed to use stratagem, if possible, to bring together the various families, but to prevent any from escaping to the woods. On the 2d of September, 1755, Winslow issued a written order, addressed to the inhabitants of Grand-Pré, Minas, River Canard, etc., "as well ancient as young men and lads," - a proclamation summoning all the males to attend him in the church at Grand-Pré on the 5th instant, to hear a communication which the governor had sent. As there had been negotiations respecting the oath of allegiance, and much discussion as to the withdrawal of the Acadians from the country, though none as to their removal and dispersal, it was understood that this was an important meeting, and upon the day named four hundred and eighteen men and boys assembled in the church. Winslow, attended by his officers and men, caused a guard to be placed round the church, and then announced to the people his majesty's decision that they were to be removed with their families out of the country. The church became at once a guardhouse, and all the prisoners were under strict surveillance. At the same time similar plans had been carried out at Pisiquid under Captain Murray, and less successfully at Chignecto. Meanwhile there were whispers of a rising among the prisoners, and although the transports which had been ordered from Boston had not yet arrived, it was determined to make use of the vessels which had conveyed the troops, and remove the men to these for safer keeping. This was done on the 10th of September, and the men remained on the vessels in the harbor until the arrival of the transports, when these were made use of, and about three thousand souls sent out of the country to North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, and Massachusetts. In the haste and confusion of sending them off, - a haste which was increased by the anxiety of the officers to be rid of the distasteful business, and a confusion which was greater from the difference of tongues, — many families were separated, and some at least never came together again.

The story of Evangeline is the story of such a separation. The removal of the Acadians was a blot upon the government of Nova Scotia and upon that of Great Britain, which never disowned the deed, although it was probably done without direct permission or command from England. It proved to be unnecessary, but it must also be remembered that to many men at that time the English power seemed trembling before France, and that the colony at Halifax regarded the act as one of self-preservation.

The authorities for an historical inquiry into this subject are best seen in a volume published by the government of Nova Scotia at Halifax in 1869, entitled Selections from the Public Documents of the Province of Nova Scotia, edited by Thomas B. Akins, D. C. L., Commissioner of Public Records; and in a manuscript journal kept by Colonel Winslow, now in the cabinet of the Massachusetts Historical Society in Boston. At the State House in Boston are two volumes of records, entitled French Neutrals, which contain voluminous papers relating to the treatment of the Acadians who were sent to Massachusetts. Probably the work used by the poet in writing Evangeline was An Historical and Statistical Account of Nova Scotia, by Thomas C. Haliburton, who is best known as the author of The Clock-Maker, or The Sayings and Doings of Samuel Slick of Slickville, a book which, written apparently to prick the Nova Scotians into more enterprise, was for a long while the chief representative of Yankee smartness. Judge Haliburton's history was published in 1829. A later history, which takes advantage more freely of historical documents, is A History of Nova Scotia, or Acadie, by Beamish Murdock, Esq., Q. C., Halifax, 1866. Still more recent is a smaller, well-written work, entitled The History of Acadia from its

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

First Discovery to its Surrender to England by the Treaty of Paris, by James Hannay, St. John, N. B., 1879. W. J. Anderson published a paper in the Transactions of the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec, New Series, part 7, 1870, entitled Evangeline and the Archives of Nova Scotia, in which he examines the poem by the light of the volume of Nova Scotia Archives, edited by T. B. Akins. The sketches of travellers in Nova Scotia, as Acadia, or a Month among the Blue Noses, by F. S. Cozzens, and Baddeck, by C. D. Warner, give the present appearance of the country and inhabitants.

The measure of Evangeline is what is commonly known as English dactylic hexameter. The hexameter is the measure used by Homer in the Iliad and the Odyssey, and by Virgil in the Æneid, but the difference between the English language and the Latin or Greek is so great, especially when we consider that in English poetry every word must be accented according to its customary pronounciation, while in scanning Greek and Latin verse accent follows the quantity of the vowels, that in applying this term of hexameter to Evangeline it must not be supposed by the reader that he is getting the effect of Greek hexameters. It is the Greek hexameter translated into English use, and some have maintained that the verse of the Iliad is better represented in the English by the trochaic measure of fifteen syllables, of which an excellent illustration is in Tennyson's Locksley Hall; others have compared the Greek hexameter to the ballad metre of fourteen syllables, used notably by Chapman in his translation of Homer's Iliad. The measure adopted by Mr. Longfellow has never become very popular in English poetry, but has repeatedly been attempted by other poets. The reader will find the subject of hexameters discussed by Matthew Arnold in his lectures On Translating Homer; by James Spedding in English Hexameters, in his recent volume, Reviews and Discussions, Literary, Political and Historical, not relating to Bacon; and by John Stuart Blackie in Remarks on English Hexameters, contained in his volume Horæ Helienicæ.

The measure lends itself easily to the lingering melancholy which marks the greater part of the poem, and the poet's fine sense of harmony between subject and form is rarely better shown than in this poem. The fall of the verse at the end of the line and the sharp recovery at the beginning of the next will be snares to the reader, who must beware of a jerking style of delivery. The voice naturally seeks a rest in the middle of the line, and this rest. or cæsural pause, should be carefully regarded; a little practice will enable one to acquire that habit of reading the hexameter, which we may liken, roughly, to the climbing of a hill, resting a moment on the summit, and then descending the other side. The charm in reading Evangeline aloud, after a clear understanding of the sense, which is the essential in all good reading, is found in this gentle labor of the former half of the line, and gentle acceleration of the latter half.]

This is the forest primeval. The murmuring pines and the hemlocks,

Bearded with moss, and in garments green, indistinct in the twilight,

Stand like Druids of eld, with voices sad and prophetic,

1. A primeval forest is, strictly speaking, one which has never been disturbed by the axe.

3. Druids were priests of the Celtic inhabitants of ancient Gaul and Britain. The name was probably of Celtic origin, but its form may have been determined by the Greek word $dr\bar{u}s$, an oak, since their places of worship were consecrated groves of oak. Perhaps the choice of the image was governed by the analogy of a religion and tribe that were to disappear before a stronger power.

- Stand like harpers hoar, with beards that rest on their bosoms.
- Loud from its rocky caverns, the deep-voiced neighboring ocean 5
- Speaks, and in accents disconsolate answers the wail of the forest.
 - This is the forest primeval; but where are the hearts that beneath it
- Leaped like the roe, when he hears in the woodland the voice of the huntsman?
- Where is the thatch-roofed village, the home of Acadian farmers,—
- Men whose lives glided on like rivers that water the woodlands,
- Darkened by shadows of earth, but reflecting an image of heaven?
- Waste are those pleasant farms, and the farmers forever departed!
- Scattered like dust and leaves, when the mighty blasts of October
- Seize them, and whirl them aloft, and sprinkle them far o'er the ocean.
- Naught but tradition remains of the beautiful village of Grand-Pré.
 - Ye who believe in affection that hopes, and endures, and is patient,
- 4. A poetical description of an ancient harper will be found in the Introduction to the Lay of the Last Minstrel, by Sir Walter Scott.
- 8. Observe how the tragedy of the story is anticipated by this picture of the startled roe.

Ye who believe in the beauty and strength of woman's devotion,

List to the mournful tradition still sung by the pines of the forest;

List to a Tale of Love in Acadie, home of the happy.

PART THE FIRST.

I.

In the Acadian land, on the shores of the Basin of Minas,

Distant, secluded, still, the little village of Grand-Pré
Lay in the fruitful valley. Vast meadows stretched to the eastward,

Giving the village its name, and pasture to flocks without number.

Dikes, that the hands of the farmers had raised with labor incessant,

- 19. In the earliest records Acadie is called Cadie; it afterwards was called Arcadia, Accadia, or L'Acadie. The name is probably a French adaptation of a word common among the Micmac Indians living there, signifying place or region, and used as an affix to other words as indicating the place where various things, as cranberries, eels, seals, were found in abundance. The French turned this Indian term into Cadie or Acadie; the English into Quoddy, in which form it remains when applied to the Quoddy Indians, to Quoddy Head, the last point of the United States next to Acadia, and in the compound Passamaquoddy, or Pollock-Ground.
- 21. Compare, for effect, the first line of Goldsmith's The Traveller. Grand-Pré will be found on the map as part of the township of Horton.
- 24. The people of Acadia are mainly the descendants of the colonists who were brought out to La Have and Port Royal by Isaac de Razilly and Charnisay between the years 1633 and 1638.

Shut out the turbulent tides; but at stated seasons the flood-gates

Opened and welcomed the sea to wander at will o'er the meadows.

West and south there were fields of flax, and orchards and cornfields

Spreading afar and unfenced o'er the plain; and away to the northward

Blomidon rose, and the forests old, and aloft on the mountains

Sea-fogs pitched their tents, and mists from the mighty
Atlantic 30

Looked on the happy valley, but ne'er from their station descended.

There, in the midst of its farms, reposed the Acadian village.

Strongly built were the houses, with frames of oak and of hemlock,

Such as the peasants of Normandy built in the reign of the Henries.

These colonists came from Rochelle, Saintonge, and Poitou, so that they were drawn from a very limited area on the west coast of France, covered by the modern departments of Vendée and Charente Inférieure. This circumstance had some influence on their mode of settling the lands of Acadia, for they came from a country of marshes, where the sea was kept out by artificial dikes, and they found in Acadia similar marshes, which they dealt with in the same way that they had been accustomed to practise in France. Hannay's History of Acadia, pp. 282, 283. An excellent account of dikes and the flooding of lowlands, as practised in Holland, may be found in A Farmer's Vacation, by George E. Waring, Jr.

29. Blomidon is a mountainous headland of red sandstone, surmounted by a perpendicular wall of basaltic trap, the whole about four hundred feet in height, at the entrance of the Basin of Minas.

Thatched were the roofs, with dormer-windows; and gables projecting

Over the basement below protected and shaded the doorway.

There in the tranquil evenings of summer, when brightly the sunset

Lighted the village street, and gilded the vanes on the chimneys,

Matrons and maidens sat in snow-white caps and in kirtles

Scarlet and blue and green, with distaffs spinning the golden 40

Flax for the gossiping looms, whose noisy shuttles within doors

Mingled their sound with the whir of the wheels and the songs of the maidens.

Solemnly down the street came the parish priest, and the children

Paused in their play to kiss the hand he extended to bless them.

Reverend walked he among them; and up rose matrons and maidens,

Hailing his slow approach with words of affectionate welcome.

Then came the laborers home from the field, and serenely the sun sank

36. The characteristics of a Normandy village may be further learned by reference to a pleasant little sketch-book, published a few years since, called Normandy Picturesque, by Henry Blackburn, and to Through Normandy, by Katharine S. Macquoid.

39. The term kirtle was sometimes applied to the jacket only, sometimes to the train or upper petticoat attached to it. A full kirtle was always both; a half kirtle was a term applied to either. A man's jacket was sometimes called a kirtle; here the reference is apparently to the full kirtle worn by women.

- Down to his rest, and twilight prevailed. Anon from the belfry
- Softly the Angelus sounded, and over the roofs of the village
- Columns of pale blue smoke, like clouds of incense ascending,
- Rose from a hundred hearths, the homes of peace and contentment.
- Thus dwelt together in love these simple Acadian farmers,—
- Dwelt in the love of God and of man. Alike were they free from
- Fear, that reigns with the tyrant, and envy, the vice of republics.
- Neither locks had they to their doors, nor bars to their windows;
- But their dwellings were open as day and the hearts of the owners;
- There the richest was poor, and the poorest lived in abundance.
 - Somewhat apart from the village, and nearer the Basin of Minas,
- Benedict Bellefontaine, the wealthiest farmer of Grand-Pré,
- Dwelt on his goodly acres; and with him, directing his household,
- Gentle Evangeline lived, his child, and the pride of the village.
- 49. Angelus Domini is the full name given to the bell which, at morning, noon, and night, called the people to prayer, in commemoration of the visit of the angel of the Lord to the Virgin Mary. It was introduced into France in its modern form in the sixteenth century.

- Stalworth and stately in form was the man of seventy winters;
- Hearty and hale was he, an oak that is covered with snow-flakes;
- White as the snow were his locks, and his cheeks as brown as the oak-leaves.
- Fair was she to behold, that maiden of seventeen summers;
- Black were her eyes as the berry that grows on the thorn by the wayside,
- Black, yet how softly they gleamed beneath the brown shade of her tresses!
- Sweet was her breath as the breath of kine that feed in the meadows.
- When in the harvest heat she bore to the reapers at noontide
- Flagons of home-brewed ale, ah! fair in sooth was the maiden.
- Fairer was she when, on Sunday morn, while the bell from its turret
- Sprinkled with holy sounds the air, as the priest with his hyssop
- Sprinkles the congregation, and scatters blessings upon them,
- Down the long street she passed, with her chaplet of beads and her missal,
- Wearing her Norman cap and her kirtle of blue, and the ear-rings
- Brought in the olden time from France, and since, as an heirloom.
- Handed down from mother to child, through long generations.
- But a celestial brightness a more ethereal beauty Shone on her face and encircled her form, when, after confession.

Homeward serenely she walked with God's benediction upon her.

When she had passed, it seemed like the ceasing of exquisite music.

Firmly builded with rafters of oak, the house of the farmer

Stood on the side of a hill commanding the sea; and a shady

Sycamore grew by the door, with a woodbine wreathing around it.

Rudely carved was the porch, with seats beneath; and a footpath

Led through an orehard wide, and disappeared in the meadow.

Under the sycamore-tree were hives overhung by a penthouse,

Such as the traveller sees in regions remote by the roadside,

Built o'er a box for the poor, or the blessed image of Mary.

Farther down, on the slope of the hill, was the well with its moss-grown

Bucket, fastened with iron, and near it a trough for the horses.

Shielding the house from storms, on the north, were the barns and the farm-yard;

There stood the broad-wheeled wains and the antique ploughs and the harrows;

There were the folds for the sheep; and there, in his feathered seraglio,

93. The accent is on the first syllable of antique, where it remains in the form antic, which once had the same general meaning.

- Strutted the lordly turkey, and crowed the cock, with the selfsame
- Voice that in ages of old had startled the penitent Peter.
- Bursting with hay were the barns, themselves a village. In each one
- Far o'er the gable projected a roof of thatch; and a staircase,
- Under the sheltering eaves, led up to the odorous cornloft.
- There too the dove-cot stood, with its meek and innocent inmates
- Murmuring ever of love; while above in the variant breezes
- Numberless noisy weathercocks rattled and sang of mutation.
 - Thus, at peace with God and the world, the farmer of Grand-Pré
- Lived on his sunny farm, and Evangeline governed his household.
- Many a youth, as he knelt in the church and opened his missal,
- Fixed his eyes upon her as the saint of his deepest devotion:
- 99. Odorous. The accent here, as well as in line 403, is upon the first syllable, where it is commonly placed; but Milton, who of all poets had the most refined ear, writes

"So from the root

Springs lighter the green stalk, from thence the leaves More airy, last the bright consummate flower

Spirits odorous breathes."

Par. Lost, Book V., lines 479-482.

But he also uses the more familiar accent in other passages, as, "An amber scent of ódorous perfume," in Samson Agonistes, line 720.

Happy was he who might touch her hand or the hem of her garment!

Many a suitor came to her door, by the darkness befriended,

And, as he knocked and waited to hear the sound of her footsteps,

Knew not which beat the louder, his heart or the knocker of iron;

Or, at the joyous feast of the Patron Saint of the village,

Bolder grew, and pressed her hand in the dance as he whispered

Hurried words of love, that seemed a part of the music.

But among all who came young Gabriel only was welcome;

Gabriel Lajeunesse, the son of Basil the blacksmith,

Who was a mighty man in the village, and honored of all men;

For since the birth of time, throughout all ages and nations,

Has the craft of the smith been held in repute by the people.

Basil was Benedict's friend. Their children from earliest childhood

Grew up together as brother and sister; and Father Felician,

Priest and pedagogue both in the village, had taught them their letters

Out of the selfsame book, with the hymns of the church and the plain-song.

122. The plain-song is a monotonic recitative of the collects.

- But when the hymn was sung, and the daily lesson completed,
- Swiftly they hurried away to the forge of Basil the blacksmith.
- There at the door they stood, with wondering eyes to behold him
- Take in his leathern lap the hoof of the horse as a plaything,
- Nailing the shoe in its place; while near him the tire of the cart-wheel
- Lay like a fiery snake, coiled round in a circle of cinders.
- Oft on autumnal eves, when without in the gathering darkness
- Bursting with light seemed the smithy, through every cranny and crevice,
- Warm by the forge within they watched the laboring bellows,
- And as its panting ceased, and the sparks expired in the ashes,
- Merrily laughed, and said they were nuns going into the chapel.
- Oft on sledges in winter, as swift as the swoop of the eagle,
- Down the hillside bounding, they glided away o'er the meadow.

 135
- Oft in the barns they climbed to the populous nests on the rafters,
- Seeking with eager eyes that wondrous stone, which
- Brings from the shore of the sea to restore the sight of its fledglings;
- 133. The French have another saying similar to this, that they were guests going in to the wedding.

Lucky was he who found that stone in the nest of the . swallow!

Thus passed a few swift years, and they no longer were children.

He was a valiant youth, and his face, like the face of the morning,

Gladdened the earth with its light, and ripened thought into action.

She was a woman now, with the heart and hopes of a woman.

6 Sunshine of Saint Eulalie" was she called; for that was the sunshine

Which, as the farmers believed, would load their orchards with apples;

She too would bring to her husband's house delight and abundance.

Filling it full of love and the ruddy faces of children.

II.

Now had the season returned, when the nights grow colder and longer,

And the retreating sun the sign of the Scorpion enters.

139. In Pluquet's Contes Populaires we are told that if one of a swallow's young is blind the mother bird seeks on the shore of the ocean a little stone, with which she restores its sight; and he adds, "He who is fortunate enough to find that stone in a swallow's nest holds a wonderful remedy." Pluquet's book treats of Norman superstitions and popular traits.

144. Pluquet also gives this proverbial saying: -

"Si le soleil rit le jour Sainte-Eulalie, Il y aura pommes et cidre à folie."

(If the sun smiles on Saint Eulalie's day, there will be plenty of apples, and cider enough.)

Saint Eulalie's day is the 12th of February.

Birds of passage sailed through the leaden air, from the ice-bound,

Desolate northern bays to the shores of tropical islands.

Harvests were gathered in; and wild with the winds of September

Wrestled the trees of the forest, as Jacob of old with the angel.

All the signs foretold a winter long and inclement.

Bees, with prophetic instinct of want, had hoarded their honey

Till the hives overflowed; and the Indian hunters asserted

Cold would the winter be, for thick was the fur of the foxes.

Such was the advent of autumn. Then followed that beautiful season,

Called by the pious Acadian peasants the Summer of All-Saints!

Filled was the air with a dreamy and magical light; and the landscape

Lay as if new-created in all the freshness of child-hood.

Peace seemed to reign upon earth, and the restless heart of the ocean

Was for a moment consoled. All sounds were in harmony blended.

Voices of children at play, the crowing of cocks in the farm-yards,

159. The Summer of All-Saints is our Indian Summer, All-Saints Day being November 1st. The French also give this season the name of Saint Martin's Summer, Saint Martin's Day being November 11th.

Whir of wings in the drowsy air, and the cooing of pigeons,

All were subdued and low as the murmurs of love, and the great sun

Looked with the eye of love through the golden vapors around him;

While arrayed in its robes of russet and scarlet and yellow,

Bright with the sheen of the dew, each glittering tree of the forest

Flashed like the plane-tree the Persian adorned with mantles and jewels.

Now recommenced the reign of rest and affection and stillness.

Day with its burden and heat had departed, and twilight descending

Brought back the evening star to the sky, and the herds to the homestead.

Pawing the ground they came, and resting their necks on each other,

And with their nostrils distended inhaling the freshness of evening.

Foremost, bearing the bell, Evangeline's beautiful heifer,

Proud of her snow-white hide, and the ribbon that waved from her collar,

Quietly paced and slow, as if conscious of human affection.

170. Herodotus, in his account of Xerxes' expedition against Greece, tells of a beautiful plane-tree which Xerxes found, and was so enamored with that he dressed it as one might a woman, and placed it under the care of a guardsman (vii. 31). Another writer, Ælian, improving on this, says he adorned it with a necklace and bracelets.

Then came the shepherd back with his bleating flocks from the seaside.

Where was their favorite pasture. Behind them followed the watch-dog,

Patient, full of importance, and grand in the pride of his instinct,

Walking from side to side with a lordly air, and superbly

Waving his bushy tail, and urging forward the stragglers;

Regent of flocks was he when the shepherd slept; their protector,

When from the forest at night, through the starry silence, the wolves howled.

Late, with the rising moon, returned the wains from the marshes,

Laden with briny hay, that filled the air with its odor. Cheerily neighed the steeds, with dew on their manes and their fetlocks,

While aloft on their shoulders the wooden and ponderous saddles,

Painted with brilliant dyes, and adorned with tassels of crimson,

Nodded in bright array, like hollyhocks heavy with blossoms.

Patiently stood the cows meanwhile, and yielded their udders

Unto the milkmaid's hand; whilst loud and in regular

193. There is a charming milkmaid's song in Tennyson's drama of Queen Mary, Act III., Scene 5, where the streaming of the milk into the sounding pails is caught in the tinkling k's of such lines as [&]quot;And you came and kissed me, milking the cow."

Into the sounding pails the foaming streamlets descended.

Lowing of cattle and peals of laughter were heard in the farm-yard,

Echoed back by the barns. Anon they sank into stillness;

Heavily closed, with a jarring sound, the valves of the barn-doors,

Rattled the wooden bars, and all for a season was silent.

In-doors, warm by the wide-mouthed fireplace, idly the farmer

Sat in his elbow-chair, and watched how the flames and the smoke-wreaths

Struggled together like foes in a burning city. Behind him,

Nodding and mocking along the wall with gestures fantastic,

Darted his own huge shadow, and vanished away into darkness.

Faces, clumsily carved in oak, on the back of his armchair

Laughed in the flickering light, and the pewter plates on the dresser

Caught and reflected the flame, as shields of armies the sunshine.

Fragments of song the old man sang, and carols of Christmas,

Such as at home, in the olden time, his fathers before him

Sang in their Norman orchards and bright Burgundian vineyards.

Close at her father's side was the gentle Evangeline seated,

- Spinning flax for the loom that stood in the corner behind her.
- Silent awhile were its treadles, at rest was its diligent shuttle,
- While the monotonous drone of the wheel, like the drone of a bagpipe,
- Followed the old man's song, and united the fragments together.
- As in a church, when the chant of the choir at intervals ceases,
- Footfalls are heard in the aisles, or words of the priest at the altar,
- So, in each pause of the song, with measured motion the clock clicked.
 - Thus as they sat, there were footsteps heard, and, suddenly lifted,
- Sounded the wooden latch, and the door swung back on its hinges.
- Benedict knew by the hob-nailed shoes it was Basil the blacksmith,
- And by her beating heart Evangeline knew who was with him.
- "Welcome!" the farmer exclaimed, as their footsteps paused on the threshold,
- "Welcome, Basil, my friend! Come, take thy place on the settle
- Close by the chimney-side, which is always empty without thee;
- Take from the shelf overhead thy pipe and the box of tobacco;
- Never so much thyself art thou as when, through the curling
- Smoke of the pipe or the forge, thy friendly and jovial face gleams

- Round and red as the harvest moon through the mist of the marshes."
- Then, with a smile of content, thus answered Basil the blacksmith,
- Taking with easy air the accustomed seat by the fireside:—
- "Benedict Bellefontaine, thou hast ever thy jest and thy ballad!
- Ever in cheerfullest mood art thou, when others are filled with
- Gloomy forebodings of ill, and see only ruin before them.
- Happy art thou, as if every day thou hadst picked up a horseshoe."
- Pausing a moment, to take the pipe that Evangeline brought him,
- And with a coal from the embers had lighted, he slowly continued:—
- "Four days now are passed since the English ships at their anchors
- Ride in the Gaspereau's mouth, with their cannon pointed against us.
- What their design may be is unknown; but all are commanded
- On the morrow to meet in the church, where his Majesty's mandate 240
- Will be proclaimed as law in the land. Alas! in the mean time
- Many surmises of evil alarm the hearts of the people."
- Then made answer the farmer: "Perhaps some friendlier purpose
- 239. The text of Colonel Winslow's proclamation will be found in Haliburton, i. 175.

- Brings these ships to our shores. Perhaps the harvests in England
- By untimely rains or untimelier heat have been blighted,
- And from our bursting barns they would feed their cattle and children."
- "Not so thinketh the folk in the village," said warmly the blacksmith,
- Shaking his head as in doubt; then, heaving a sigh, he continued:—
- "Louisburg is not forgotten, nor Beau Séjour, nor Port Royal.
- Many already have fled to the forest, and lurk on its outskirts,
- Waiting with anxious hearts the dubious fate of tomorrow.
- Arms have been taken from us, and warlike weapons of all kinds;
- Nothing is left but the blacksmith's sledge and the scythe of the mower."
- Then with a pleasant smile made answer the jovial farmer:—
- 249. Louisburg, on Cape Breton, was built by the French as a military and naval station early in the eighteenth century, but was taken by an expedition from Massachusetts under General Pepperell in 1745. It was restored by England to France in the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, and recaptured by the English in 1757. Beau Séjour was a French fort upon the neck of land connecting Acadia with the mainland which had just been captured by Winslow's forces. Port Royal, afterwards called Annapolis Royal, at the outlet of Annapolis River into the Bay of Fundy, had been disputed ground, being occupied alternately by French and English, but in 1710 was attacked by an expedition from New England, and after that held by the English government and made a fortified place.

"Safer are we unarmed, in the midst of our flocks and our cornfields,

Safer within these peaceful dikes besieged by the ocean, Than our fathers in forts, besieged by the enemy's cannon.

Fear no evil, my friend, and to-night may no shadow of sorrow

Fall on this house and hearth; for this is the night of the contract.

Built are the house and the barn. The merry lads of the village

Strongly have built them and well; and, breaking the glebe round about them,

Filled the barn with hay, and the house with food for a twelvemonth.

René Leblanc will be here anon, with his papers and inkhorn.

Shall we not then be glad, and rejoice in the joy of our children?"

As apart by the window she stood, with her hand in her lover's,

Blushing Evangeline heard the words that her father had spoken,

And, as they died on his lips, the worthy notary entered.

III.

Bent like a laboring oar, that toils in the surf of the ocean,

267. A notary is an officer authorized to attest contracts or writings of any kind. His authority varies in different countries; in France he is the necessary maker of all contracts where the subject-matter exceeds 150 francs, and his instruments, which are preserved and registered by himself, are the originals, the parties preserving only copies.

Bent, but not broken, by age was the form of the notary public;

Shocks of yellow hair, like the silken floss of the maize, hung

Over his shoulders; his forehead was high; and glasses with horn bows

Sat astride on his nose, with a look of wisdom supernal. Father of twenty children was he, and more than a hundred

Children's children rode on his knee, and heard his great watch tick.

Four long years in the times of the war had he languished a captive, 275

Suffering much in an old French fort as the friend of the English.

Now, though warier grown, without all guile or suspicion,

Ripe in wisdom was he, but patient, and simple, and childlike.

He was beloved by all, and most of all by the children;

For he told them tales of the Loup-garou in the forest, 280

275. King George's War, which broke out in 1744 in Cape Breton, in an attack by the French upon an English garrison, and closed with the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1748; or, the reference may possibly be to Queen Anne's war, 1702-1713, when the French aided the Indians in their warfare with the colonists.

280. The Loup-garou, or were-wolf, is, according to an old superstition especially prevalent in France, a man with power to turn himself into a wolf, which he does that he may devour children. In later times the superstition passed into the more innocent one of men having a power to charm wolves.

And of the goblin that came in the night to water the horses,

And of the white Létiche, the ghost of a child who unchristened

Died, and was doomed to haunt unseen the chambers of children;

And how on Christmas eve the oxen talked in the stable,

And how the fever was cured by a spider shut up in a nutshell,

And of the marvellous powers of four-leaved clover and horseshoes,

With whatsoever else was writ in the lore of the village. Then up rose from his seat by the fireside Basil the blacksmith.

Knocked from his pipe the ashes, and slowly extending his right hand,

"Father Leblanc," he exclaimed, "thou hast heard the talk in the village,

And, perchance, canst tell us some news of these ships and their errand."

Then with modest demeanor made answer the notary public, —

"Gossip enough have I heard, in sooth, yet am never the wiser;

282. Pluquet relates this superstition, and conjectures that the white, fleet ermine gave rise to it.

284. A belief still lingers among the peasantry of England, as well as on the Continent, that at midnight, on Christmas eve, the cattle in the stalls fall down on their knees in adoration of the infant Saviour, as the old legend says was done in the stable at Bethlehem.

285. In like manner a popular superstition prevailed in England that ague could be cured by sealing a spider in a goose-quill and hanging it about the neck.

And what their errand may be I know no better than others.

Yet am I not of those who imagine some evil intention 295

Brings them here, for we are at peace; and why then molest us?"

"God's name!" shouted the hasty and somewhat irascible blacksmith;

"Must we in all things look for the how, and the why, and the wherefore?

Daily injustice is done, and might is the right of the strongest!"

But, without heeding his warmth, continued the notary public, —

"Man is unjust, but God is just; and finally justice

Triumphs; and well I remember a story, that often consoled me,

When as a captive I lay in the old French fort at Port Royal."

This was the old man's favorite tale, and he loved to repeat it

When his neighbors complained that any injustice was done them.

"Once in an ancient city, whose name I no longer remember,

Raised aloft on a column, a brazen statue of Justice Stood in the public square, upholding the scales in its left hand,

And in its right a sword, as an emblem that justice presided

Over the laws of the land, and the hearts and homes of the people.

302. This is an old Florentine story; in an altered form it is the theme of Rossini's opera of La Gazza Ladra.

- Even the birds had built their nests in the scales of the balance,
- Having no fear of the sword that flashed in the sunshine above them.
- But in the course of time the laws of the land were corrupted;
- Might took the place of right, and the weak were oppressed, and the mighty
- Ruled with an iron rod. Then it chanced in a nobleman's palace
- That a necklace of pearls was lost, and ere long a suspicion
- Fell on an orphan girl who lived as maid in the household.
- She, after form of trial condemned to die on the scaffold,
- Patiently met her doom at the foot of the statue of Justice.
- As to her Father in heaven her innocent spirit ascended,
- Lo! o'er the city a tempest rose; and the bolts of the thunder
- Smote the statue of bronze, and hurled in wrath from its left hand
- Down on the pavement below the clattering scales of the balance,
- And in the hollow thereof was found the nest of a magpie,
- Into whose clay-built walls the necklace of pearls was inwoven."
- Silenced, but not convinced, when the story was ended, the blacksmith
- Stood like a man who fain would speak, but findeth no language;

- All his thoughts were congealed into lines on his face, as the vapors
- Freeze in fantastic shapes on the window-panes in the winter.
 - Then Evangeline lighted the brazen lamp on the table,
- Filled, till it overflowed, the pewter tankard with home-brewed
- Nut-brown ale, that was famed for its strength in the village of Grand-Pré;
- While from his pocket the notary drew his papers and inkhorn,
- Wrote with a steady hand the date and the age of the parties,
- Naming the dower of the bride in flocks of sheep and in cattle.
- Orderly all things proceeded, and duly and well were completed,
- And the great seal of the law was set like a sun on the margin.
- Then from his leathern pouch the farmer threw on the table
- Three times the old man's fee in solid pieces of silver;
- And the notary rising, and blessing the bride and bridegroom,
- Lifted aloft the tankard of ale and drank to their welfare.
- Wiping the foam from his lip, he solemnly bowed and departed,
- While in silence the others sat and mused by the fire• side,

Till Evangeline brought the draught-board out of its corner.

Soon was the game begun. In friendly contention the old men 345

Laughed at each lucky hit, or unsuccessful manœuvre, Laughed when a man was crowned, or a breach was made in the king-row.

Meanwhile apart, in the twilight gloom of a window's embrasure,

Sat the lovers and whispered together, beholding the moon rise

Over the pallid sea and the silvery mist of the meadows.

Silently one by one, in the infinite meadows of heaven, Blossomed the lovely stars, the forget-me-nots of the angels.

Thus was the evening passed. Anon the bell from the belfry

Rang out the hour of nine, the village curfew, and straightway

Rose the guests and departed; and silence reigned in the household.

344. The word draughts is derived from the circumstance of drawing the men from one square to another.

354. Curfew is a corruption of couvre-feu, or cover fire. In the Middle Ages, when police patrol at night was almost unknown, it was attempted to lessen the chances of crime by making it an offence against the laws to be found in the streets in the night, and the curfew bell was tolled, at various hours, according to the custom of the place, from seven to nine o'clock in the evening. It warned honest people to lock their doors, cover their fires, and go to bed. The custom still lingers in many places, even in America, of ringing a bell at nine o'clock in the evening.

Many a farewell word and sweet good-night on the door-step

Lingered long in Evangeline's heart, and filled it with gladness.

Carefully then were covered the embers that glowed on the hearth-stone,

And on the oaken stairs resounded the tread of the farmer.

Soon with a soundless step the foot of Evangeline followed.

Up the staircase moved a luminous space in the darkness,

Lighted less by the lamp than the shining face of the maiden.

Silent she passed through the hall, and entered the door of her chamber.

Simple that chamber was, with its curtains of white, and its clothes-press

Ample and high, on whose spacious shelves were carefully folded 365

Linen and woollen stuffs, by the hand of Evangeline woven.

This was the precious dower she would bring to her husband in marriage,

Better than flocks and herds, being proofs of her skill as a housewife.

Soon she extinguished her lamp, for the mellow and radiant moonlight

Streamed through the windows, and lighted the room, till the heart of the maiden 370

Swelled and obeyed its power, like the tremulous tides of the ocean.

Ah! she was fair, exceeding fair to behold, as she stood with

- Naked snow-white feet on the gleaming floor of her chamber!
- Little she dreamed that below, among the trees of the orchard,
- Waited her lover and watched for the gleam of her lamp and her shadow.
- Yet were her thoughts of him, and at times a feeling of sadness
- Passed o'er her soul, as the sailing shade of clouds in the moonlight
- Flitted across the floor and darkened the room for a moment.
- And, as she gazed from the window, she saw serenely the moon pass
- Forth from the folds of a cloud, and one star follow her footsteps,
- As out of Abraham's tent young Ishmael wandered with Hagar.

IV.

- Pleasantly rose next morn the sun on the village of Grand-Pré.
- Pleasantly gleamed in the soft, sweet air the Basin of Minas,
- Where the ships, with their wavering shadows, were riding at anchor.
- Life had long been astir in the village, and clamorous labor
- Knocked with its hundred hands at the golden gates of the morning.
- Now from the country around, from the farms and neighboring hamlets,
- Came in their holiday dresses the blithe Acadian peasants.

Many a glad good-morrow and jocund laugh from the young folk

Made the bright air brighter, as up from the numerous meadows,

Where no path could be seen but the track of wheels in the greensward,

Group after group appeared, and joined, or passed on the highway.

Long ere noon, in the village all sounds of labor were silenced.

Thronged were the streets with people; and noisy groups at the house-doors

Sat in the cheerful sun, and rejoiced and gossiped together.

Every house was an inn, where all were welcomed and feasted;

For with this simple people, who lived like brothers together,

All things were held in common, and what one had was another's.

Yet under Benedict's roof hospitality seemed more abundant:

396. "Real misery was wholly unknown, and benevolence anticipated the demands of poverty. Every misfortune was relieved as it were before it could be felt, without ostentation on the one hand, and without meanness on the other. It was, in short, a society of brethren, every individual of which was equally ready to give and to receive what he thought the common right of mankind."—From the Abbé Raynal's account of the Acadians. The Abbé Guillaume Thomas Francis Raynal was a French writer (1711-1796), who published A Philosophical History of the Settlements and Trade of the Europeans in the East and West Indies, in which he included also some account of Canada and Nova Scotia. His picture of life among the Acadians, somewhat highly colored, is the source from which after writers have drawn their knowledge of Acadian manners.

For Evangeline stood among the guests of her father;

Bright was her face with smiles, and words of welcome and gladness

Fell from her beautiful lips, and blessed the cup as she gave it.

Under the open sky, in the odorous air of the orchard,

Stript of its golden fruit, was spread the feast of betrothal.

There in the shade of the porch were the priest and the notary seated;

There good Benedict sat, and sturdy Basil the blacksmith.

Not far withdrawn from these, by the cider-press and the beehives,

Michael the fiddler was placed, with the gayest of hearts and of waistcoats.

Shadow and light from the leaves alternately played on his snow-white

Hair, as it waved in the wind; and the jolly face of the fiddler

Glowed like a living coal when the ashes are blown from the embers.

Gayly the old man sang to the vibrant sound of his fiddle,

Tous les Bourgeois de Chartres, and Le Carillon de Dunkerque,

Vous connaissez Cybèle, Qui sut fixer le Temps; On la disait fort belle, Même dans ses vieux ans.

^{413.} Tous les Bourgeois de Chartres was a song written by Ducauroi, maître de chapelle of Henri IV., the words of which are:—

And anon with his wooden shoes beat time to the music.

Merrily, merrily whirled the wheels of the dizzving dances

Under the orchard-trees and down the path to the meadows:

Old folk and young together, and children mingled among them.

Fairest of all the maids was Evangeline, Benedict's daughter!

Noblest of all the youths was Gabriel, son of the blacksmith!

So passed the morning away. And lo! with a summons sonorous

Sounded the bell from its tower, and over the meadows a drum beat.

Thronged ere long was the church with men. Without, in the churchyard,

CHORUS.

Cette divinité, quoique dejà grand'mere Avait les yeux doux, le teint frais, Avait même certains attraits Fermes comme la Terre.

A grandame, yet by goddess birth She kept sweet eyes, a color warm, And held through everything a charm Fast like the earth.

Le Carillon de Dunkerque was a popular song to a tune played on the Dunkirk chimes. The words are: -

Le Carillon de Dunkerque.

Imprudent, téméraire A l'instant, je l'espère Dans mon juste courroux,

Tu vas tomber sous mes coups! -Je brave ta menace.

- Etre moi! quelle audace! Avance done, poltron! Tu trembles? non, non, non,
- J'étouffe de colère!
- Je ris de ta colère.

The Carillon of Dunkirk.

Reckless and rash, Take heed for the flash Of mine anger, 't is just

To lay thee with its blows in the dust,

- Your threat I defy.

- -- What! You would be I! Come, coward! I'll show -You tremble? No, no!
- I 'm choking with rage!
- A fig for your rage!

The music to which the old man sang these songs will be found in La Clé du Caveau, by Pierre Capelle, Nos. 564 and 739. Paris: A. Cotelle.

Waited the women. They stood by the graves, and hung on the headstones

Garlands of autumn-leaves and evergreens fresh from the forest.

Then came the guard from the ships, and marching proudly among them

Entered the sacred portal. With loud and dissonant clangor

Echoed the sound of their brazen drums from ceiling and casement,—

Echoed a moment only, and slowly the ponderous portal

Closed, and in silence the crowd awaited the will of the soldiers.

Then uprose their commander, and spake from the steps of the altar,

Holding aloft in his hands, with its seals, the royal commission.

"You are convened this day," he said, "by his Majesty's orders.

Clement and kind has he been; but how you have answered his kindness

Let your own hearts reply! To my natural make and my temper

Painful the task is I do, which to you I know must be grievous.

Yet must I bow and obey, and deliver the will of our monarch:

Namely, that all your lands, and dwellings, and cattle of all kinds

Forfeited be to the crown; and that you yourselves from this province

432. Colonel Winslow has preserved in his Diary the speech which he delivered to the assembled Acadians, and it is copied by Haliburton in his History of Nova Scotia, i. 166, 167.

Be transported to other lands. God grant you may dwell there

Ever as faithful subjects, a happy and peaceable people! 440

Prisoners now I declare you, for such is his Majesty's pleasure!"

As, when the air is serene in the sultry solstice of summer,

Suddenly gathers a storm, and the deadly sling of the hailstones

Beats down the farmer's corn in the field, and shatters his windows,

Hiding the sun, and strewing the ground with thatch from the house-roofs,

Bellowing fly the herds, and seek to break their enclosures;

So on the hearts of the people descended the words of the speaker.

Silent a moment they stood in speechless wonder, and then rose

Louder and ever louder a wail of sorrow and anger,

And, by one impulse moved, they madly rushed to the door-way.

Vain was the hope of escape; and cries and fierce imprecations

Rang through the house of prayer; and high o'er the heads of the others

Rose, with his arms uplifted, the figure of Basil the blacksmith,

As, on a stormy sea, a spar is tossed by the billows.

Flushed was his face and distorted with passion; and wildly he shouted, — 455

"Down with the tyrants of England! we never have sworn them allegiance!

- Death to these foreign soldiers, who seize on our homes and our harvests!"
- More he fain would have said, but the merciless hand of a soldier
- Smote him upon the mouth, and dragged him down to the pavement.
 - In the midst of the strife and tumult of angry contention,
- Lo! the door of the chancel opened, and Father Felician
- Entered, with serious mien, and ascended the steps of the altar.
- Raising his reverend hand, with a gesture he awed into silence
- All that clamorous throng; and thus he spake to his people;
- Deep were his tones and solemn; in accents measured and mournful
- Spake he, as, after the tocsin's alarum, distinctly the clock strikes.
- "What is this that ye do, my children? what madness has seized you?
- Forty years of my life have I labored among you, and taught you,
- Not in word alone, but in deed, to love one another!
- Is this the fruit of my toils, of my vigils and prayers and privations?
- Have you so soon forgotten all lessons of love and forgiveness?
- This is the house of the Prince of Peace, and would you profane it
- Thus with violent deeds and hearts overflowing with hatred?

Lo! where the crucified Christ from His cross is gazing upon you!

See! in those sorrowful eyes what meekness and holy compassion!

Hark! how those lips still repeat the prayer, 'O Father, forgive them!'

Let us repeat that prayer in the hour when the wicked assail us,

Let us repeat it now, and say, 'O Father, forgive them!'"

Few were his words of rebuke, but deep in the hearts of his people

Sank they, and sobs of contrition succeeded the passionate outbreak,

While they repeated his prayer, and said, "O Father, forgive them!"

Then came the evening service. The tapers gleamed from the altar;

Fervent and deep was the voice of the priest, and the people responded,

Not with their lips alone, but their hearts; and the Ave Maria

Sang they, and fell on their knees, and their souls, with devotion translated,

Rose on the ardor of prayer, like Elijah ascending to heaven.

Meanwhile had spread in the village the tidings of ill, and on all sides

Wandered, wailing, from house to house the women and children.

Shielding her eyes from the level rays of the sun, that, descending,

Lighted the village street with mysterious splendor, and roofed each

Peasant's cottage with golden thatch, and emblazoned its windows.

Long within had been spread the snow-white cloth on the table;

There stood the wheaten loaf, and the honey fragrant with wild flowers;

There stood the tankard of ale, and the cheese fresh brought from the dairy;

And at the head of the board the great arm-chair of the farmer.

Thus did Evangeline wait at her father's door, as the

Threw the long shadows of trees o'er the broad ambrosial meadows.

Ah! on her spirit within a deeper shadow had fallen,

And from the fields of her soul a fragrance celestial ascended,—

Charity, meekness, love, and hope, and forgiveness, and patience!

Then, all forgetful of self, she wandered into the village,

Cheering with looks and words the mournful hearts of the women,

As o'er the darkening fields with lingering steps they departed,

Urged by their household cares, and the weary feet of their children.

492. To emblazon is literally to adorn anything with ensigns armorial. It was often the custom to work these ensigns into the design of painted windows.

- Down sank the great red sun, and in golden, glimmering vapors
- Veiled the light of his face, like the Prophet descending from Sinai.
- Sweetly over the village the bell of the Angelus sounded.
 - Meanwhile, amid the gloom, by the church Evangeline lingered.
- All was silent within; and in vain at the door and the windows
- Stood she, and listened and looked, until, overcome by emotion,
- "Gabriel!" cried she aloud with tremulous voice; but no answer
- Came from the graves of the dead, nor the gloomier grave of the living.
- Slowly at length she returned to the tenantless house of her father.
- Smouldered the fire on the hearth, on the board was the supper untasted.
- Empty and drear was each room, and haunted with phantoms of terror.
- Sadly echoed her step on the stair and the floor of her chamber.
- In the dead of the night she heard the disconsolate rain fall
- Loud on the withered leaves of the sycamore-tree by the window.
- Keenly the lightning flashed; and the voice of the echoing thunder
- Told her that God was in heaven, and governed the world He created!

Then she remembered the tale she had heard of the justice of Heaven;

Soothed was her troubled soul, and she peacefully slumbered till morning.

Four times the sun had risen and set; and now on the fifth day

Cheerily called the cock to the sleeping maids of the farm-house.

Soon o'er the yellow fields, in silent and mournful procession,

Came from the neighboring hamlets and farms the Acadian women,

Driving in ponderous wains their household goods to the sea-shore,

Pausing and looking back to gaze once more on their dwellings,

Ere they were shut from sight by the winding road and the woodland.

Close at their sides their children ran, and urged on the oxen,

While in their little hands they clasped some fragments of playthings.

Thus to the Gaspereau's mouth they hurried; and there on the sea-beach

Piled in confusion lay the household goods of the peasants.

All day long between the shore and the ships did the boats ply;

All day long the wains came laboring down from the village.

Late in the afternoon, when the sun was near to his setting,

Echoed far o'er the fields came the roll of drums from the churchyard.

Thither the women and children thronged. On a sudden the church-doors

Opened, and forth came the guard, and marching in gloomy procession 540

Followed the long-imprisoned, but patient, Acadian farmers.

Even as pilgrims, who journey afar from their homes and their country,

Sing as they go, and in singing forget they are weary and wayworn,

So with songs on their lips the Acadian peasants descended

Down from the church to the shore, amid their wives and their daughters.

Foremost the young men came; and, raising together their voices,

Sang with tremulous lips a chant of the Catholic Missions:—

"Sacred heart of the Saviour! O inexhaustible fountain!

Fill our hearts this day with strength and submission and patience!"

Then the old men, as they marched, and the women that stood by the wayside

Joined in the sacred psalm, and the birds in the sunshine above them

Mingled their notes therewith, like voices of spirits departed.

Half-way down to the shore Evangeline waited in silence,

Not overcome with grief, but strong in the hour of affliction, —

Calmly and sadly she waited, until the procession approached her,

And she beheld the face of Gabriel pale with emotion.

Tears then filled her eyes, and, eagerly running to meet him,

Clasped she his hands, and laid her head on his shoulder, and whispered,—

"Gabriel! be of good cheer! for if we love one another

Nothing, in truth, can harm us, whatever mischances may happen!"

Smiling she spake these words; then suddenly paused, for her father

Saw she, slowly advancing. Alas! how changed was his aspect!

Gone was the glow from his cheek, and the fire from his eye, and his footstep

Heavier seemed with the weight of the heavy heart in his bosom.

But with a smile and a sigh, she clasped his neck and embraced him,

Speaking words of endearment where words of comfort availed not.

Thus to the Gaspereau's mouth moved on that mournful procession.

There disorder prevailed, and the tumult and stir of embarking.

Busily plied the freighted boats; and in the confusion Wives were torn from their husbands, and mothers, too late, saw their children

Left on the land, extending their arms, with wildest entreaties.

So unto separate ships were Basil and Gabriel carried,

While in despair on the shore Evangeline stood with her father.

Half the task was not done when the sun went down, and the twilight

Deepened and darkened around; and in haste the refluent ocean 575

Fled away from the shore, and left the line of the sand-beach

Covered with waifs of the tide, with kelp and the slippery sea-weed.

Farther back in the midst of the household goods and the wagons,

Like to a gypsy camp, or a leaguer after a battle,

All escape cut off by the sea, and the sentinels near them,

Lay encamped for the night the houseless Acadian farmers.

Back to its nethermost caves retreated the bellowing ocean,

Dragging adown the beach the rattling pebbles, and leaving

Inland and far up the shore the stranded boats of the sailors.

Then, as the night descended, the herds returned from their pastures;

Sweet was the moist still air with the odor of milk from their udders;

Lowing they waited, and long, at the well-known bars of the farm-yard,—

Waited and looked in vain for the voice and the hand of the milkmaid.

Silence reigned in the streets; from the church no Angelus sounded,

Rose no smoke from the roofs, and gleamed no lights from the windows.

But on the shores meanwhile the evening fires had been kindled,

Built of the drift-wood thrown on the sands from wrecks in the tempest.

Round them shapes of gloom and sorrowful faces were gathered,

Voices of women were heard, and of men, and the crying of children.

Onward from fire to fire, as from hearth to hearth in his parish,

Wandered the faithful priest, consoling and blessing and cheering,

Like unto shipwrecked Paul on Melita's desolate seashore.

Thus he approached the place where Evangeline sat with her father,

And in the flickering light beheld the face of the old man,

Haggard and hollow and wan, and without either thought or emotion,

E'en as the face of a clock from which the hands have been taken.

Vainly Evangeline strove with words and caresses to cheer him,

Vainly offered him food; yet he moved not, he looked not, he spake not,

But, with a vacant stare, ever gazed at the flickering fire-light.

"Benedicite!" murmured the priest, in tones of compassion.

More he fain would have said, but his heart was full, and his accents

Faltered and paused on his lips, as the feet of a child on a threshold,

- Hushed by the scene he beholds, and the awful presence of sorrow.
- Silently, therefore, he laid his hand on the head of the maiden,
- Raising his tearful eyes to the silent stars that above them
- Moved on their way, unperturbed by the wrongs and sorrows of mortals.
- Then sat he down at her side, and they wept together in silence.
 - Suddenly rose from the south a light, as in autumn the blood-red
- Moon climbs the crystal walls of heaven, and o'er the horizon
- Titan-like stretches its hundred hands upon mountain and meadow,
- Seizing the rocks and the rivers, and piling huge shadows together.
- Broader and ever broader it gleamed on the roofs of the village,
- Gleamed on the sky and the sea, and the ships that lay in the roadstead.
- Columns of shining smoke uprose, and flashes of flame were
- Thrust through their folds and withdrawn, like the quivering hands of a martyr.
- 615. The Titans were giant deities in Greek mythology who attempted to deprive Saturn of the sovereignty of heaven, and were driven down into Tartarus by Jupiter, the son of Saturn, who hurled thunderbolts at them. Briareus, the hundred-handed giant, was in mythology of the same parentage as the Titans, but was not classed with them.

Then as the wind seized the gleeds and the burning thatch, and, uplifting,

Whirled them aloft through the air, at once from a hundred house-tops

Started the sheeted smoke with flashes of flame intermingled.

These things beheld in dismay the crowd on the shore and on shipboard.

Speechless at first they stood, then cried aloud in their anguish,

"We shall behold no more our homes in the village of Grand-Pré!"

Loud on a sudden the cocks began to crow in the farmyards,

Thinking the day had dawned; and anon the lowing of cattle

Came on the evening breeze, by the barking of dogs interrupted.

Then rose a sound of dread, such as startles the sleeping encampments

Far in the western prairies of forests that skirt the Nebraska,

When the wild horses affrighted sweep by with the speed of the whirlwind,

621. Gleeds. Hot, burning coals; a Chaucerian word:—

"And wafres piping host out of the gleede."

Canterbury Tales, 1. 3379.

The burning of the houses was in accordance with the instructions of the Governor to Colonel Winslow, in case he should fail in collecting all the inhabitants: "You must proceed by the most vigorous measures possible, not only in compelling them to embark, but in depriving those who shall escape of all means of shelter or support, by burning their houses and by destroying everything that may afford them the means of subsistence in the country."

- Or the loud bellowing herds of buffaloes rush to the river.
- Such was the sound that arose on the night, as the herds and the horses
- Broke through their folds and fences, and madly rushed o'er the meadows.
 - Overwhelmed with the sight, yet speechless, the priest and the maiden
- Gazed on the scene of terror that reddened and widened before them:
- And as they turned at length to speak to their silent companion,
- Lo! from his seat he had fallen, and stretched abroad on the seashore
- Motionless lay his form, from which the soul had departed.
- Slowly the priest uplifted the lifeless head, and the
- Knelt at her father's side, and wailed aloud in her terror.
- Then in a swoon she sank, and lay with her head on his bosom.
- Through the long night she lay in deep, oblivious slumber:
- And when she woke from the trance, she beheld a multitude near her.
- Faces of friends she beheld, that were mournfully gazing upon her,
- Pallid, with tearful eyes, and looks of saddest compassion.
- Still the blaze of the burning village illumined the landscape,

- Reddened the sky overhead, and gleamed on the faces around her,
- And like the day of doom it seemed to her wavering senses.

 650
- Then a familiar voice she heard, as it said to the people,—
- "Let us bury him here by the sea. When a happier season
- Brings us again to our homes from the unknown land of our exile,
- Then shall his sacred dust be piously laid in the churchyard."
- Such were the words of the priest. And there in haste by the sea-side,
- Having the glare of the burning village for funeral torches,
- But without bell or book, they buried the farmer of Grand-Pré.
- And as the voice of the priest repeated the service of sorrow,
- Lo! with a mournful sound like the voice of a vast congregation,
- Solemnly answered the sea, and mingled its roar with the dirges.
- 'T was the returning tide, that afar from the waste of the ocean,
- With the first dawn of the day, came heaving and hurrying landward.
- Then recommenced once more the stir and noise of embarking;
- 657. The bell was tolled to mark the passage of the soul into the other world; the book was the service book. The phrase "bell, book, or candle" was used in referring to excommunication.

And with the ebb of the tide the ships sailed out of the harbor,

Leaving behind them the dead on the shore, and the village in ruins.

PART THE SECOND.

I.

Many a weary year had passed since the burning of Grand-Pré,

When on the falling tide the freighted vessels departed,

Bearing a nation, with all its household gods, into exile,

Exile without an end, and without an example in story.

Far asunder, on separate coasts, the Acadians landed;

Scattered were they, like flakes of snow, when the wind from the northeast

Strikes aslant through the fogs that darken the Banks of Newfoundland.

Friendless, homeless, hopeless, they wandered from city to city,

From the cold lakes of the North to sultry Southern savannas, —

From the bleak shores of the sea to the lands where the Father of Waters

Seizes the hills in his hands, and drags them down to the ocean,

Deep in their sands to bury the scattered bones of the mammoth.

677. Bones of the mastodon, or mammoth, have been found

Friends they sought and homes; and many, despairing, heart-broken,

Asked of the earth but a grave, and no longer a friend nor a fireside.

Written their history stands on tablets of stone in the churchyards.

Long among them was seen a maiden who waited and wandered,

Lowly and meek in spirit, and patiently suffering all things.

Fair was she and young; but, alas! before her extended,

Dreary and vast and silent, the desert of life, with its pathway

Marked by the graves of those who had sorrowed and suffered before her,

Passions long extinguished, and hopes long dead and abandoned,

As the emigrant's way o'er the Western desert is marked by

Camp-fires long consumed, and bones that bleach in the sunshine.

Something there was in her life incomplete, imperfect, unfinished;

As if a morning of June, with all its music and sunshine,

Suddenly paused in the sky, and, fading, slowly descended

Into the east again, from whence it late had arisen.

Sometimes she lingered in towns, till, urged by the fever within her, scattered all over the territory of the United States and Canada, but the greatest number have been collected in the Salt Licks of Kentucky, and in the States of Ohio, Mississippi, Missouri, and Alabama.

- Urged by a restless longing, the hunger and thirst of the spirit,
- She would commence again her endless search and endeavor;
- Sometimes in churchyards strayed, and gazed on the crosses and tombstones,
- Sat by some nameless grave, and thought that perhaps in its bosom
- He was already at rest, and she longed to slumber beside him.
- Sometimes a rumor, a hearsay, an inarticulate whisper,
- Came with its airy hand to point and beckon her forward. 700
- Sometimes she spake with those who had seen her beloved and known him,
- But it was long ago, in some far-off place or forgotten.
- "Gabriel Lajeunesse!" they said; "Oh, yes! we have seen him.
- He was with Basil the blacksmith, and both have gone to the prairies;
- Coureurs-des-bois are they, and famous hunters and trappers."
- 699. Observe the diminution in this line, by which one is led to the airy hand in the next.
- 705. The coureurs-des-bois formed a class of men, very early in Canadian history, produced by the exigencies of the fur-trade. They were French by birth, but by long affiliation with the Indians and adoption of their customs had become half-civilized vagrants, whose chief vocation was conducting the canoes of the traders along the lakes and rivers of the interior. Bushrangers is the English equivalent. They played an important part in the Indian wars, but were nearly as lawless as the Indians themselves. The reader will find them frequently referred to in

"Gabriel Lajeunesse!" said others; "Oh, yes! we have seen him.

He is a voyageur in the lowlands of Louisiana."

Then would they say, "Dear child! why dream and wait for him longer?

Are there not other youths as fair as Gabriel? others

Who have hearts as tender and true, and spirits as loyal?

Here is Baptiste Leblanc, the notary's son, who has loved thee

Many a tedious year; come, give him thy hand and be happy!

Then would Evangeline answer, serenely but sadly, "I cannot!

Whither my heart has gone, there follows my hand, and not elsewhere.

For when the heart goes before, like a lamp, and illumines the pathway,

Many things are made clear, that else lie hidden in darkness."

Thereupon the priest, her friend and father confessor, Said, with a smile, "O daughter! thy God thus speaketh within thee!

Talk not of wasted affection, affection never was wasted;

Parkman's histories, especially in The Conspiracy of Pontiac, The Discovery of the Great West, and Frontenac and New France under Louis XIV.

707. A voyageur is a river boatman, and is a term applied usually to Canadians.

713. St. Catherine of Alexandria and St. Catherine of Siena were both celebrated for their vows of virginity. Hence the saying to braid St. Catherine's tresses, of one devoted to a single life.

- If it enrich not the heart of another, its waters, returning
- Back to their springs, like the rain, shall fill them full of refreshment;
- That which the fountain sends forth returns again to the fountain.
- Patience; accomplish thy labor; accomplish thy work of affection!
- Sorrow and silence are strong, and patient endurance is godlike.

 725
- Therefore accomplish thy labor of love, till the heart is made godlike,
- Purified, strengthened, perfected, and rendered more worthy of heaven!"
- Cheered by the good man's words, Evangeline labored and waited.
- Still in her heart she heard the funeral dirge of the ocean,
- But with its sound there was mingled a voice that whispered, "Despair not!" 730
- Thus did that poor soul wander in want and cheerless discomfort,
- Bleeding, barefooted, over the shards and thorns of existence.
- Let me essay, O Muse! to follow the wanderer's footsteps;—
- Not through each devious path, each changeful year of existence;
- But as a traveller follows a streamlet's course through the valley:

 735
- Far from its margin at times, and seeing the gleam of its water
- Here and there, in some open space, and at intervals only;

Then drawing nearer its banks, through sylvan glooms that conceal it,

Though he behold it not, he can hear its continuous murmur;

Happy, at length, if he find a spot where it reaches an outlet.

II.

It was the month of May. Far down the Beautiful River,

Past the Ohio shore and past the mouth of the Wabash,

Into the golden stream of the broad and swift Mississippi,

Floated a cumbrous boat, that was rowed by Acadian boatmen.

It was a band of exiles: a raft, as it were, from the shipwrecked 745

Nation, scattered along the coast, now floating together,

Bound by the bonds of a common belief and a common misfortune;

Men and women and children, who, guided by hope or by hearsay,

Sought for their kith and their kin among the fewacred farmers

On the Acadian coast, and the prairies of fair Opelousas.

741. The Iroquois gave to this river the name of Ohio, or the Beautiful River, and La Salle, who was the first European to discover it, preserved the name, so that it was transferred to maps very early.

750. Between the 1st of January and the 13th of May, 1765, about six hundred and fifty Acadians had arrived at New Or-

With them Evangeline went, and her guide, the Father Felician.

Onward o'er sunken sands, through a wilderness sombre with forests,

Day after day they glided adown the turbulent river; Night after night, by their blazing fires, encamped on its borders.

Now through rushing chutes, among green islands, where plumelike 755

Cotton-trees nodded their shadowy crests, they swept with the current,

Then emerged into broad lagoons, where silvery sandbars

Lay in the stream, and along the wimpling waves of their margin,

Shining with snow-white plumes, large flocks of pelicans waded.

Level the landscape grew, and along the shores of the river, 760

Shaded by china-trees, in the midst of luxuriant gardens,

Stood the houses of planters, with negro cabins and dove-cots.

They were approaching the region where reigns perpetual summer, leans. Louisiana had been ceded by France to Spain in 1762, but did not really pass under the control of the Spanish until 1769. The existence of a French population attracted the wandering Acadians, and they were sent by the authorities to form settlements in Attakapas and Opelousas. They afterward formed settlements on both sides of the Mississippi from the German Coast up to Baton Rouge, and even as high as Pointe Coupée. Hence the name of Acadian Coast, which a portion of the banks of the river still bears. See Gayarré's History of Louisiana: The French Dominion, vol. ii.

Where through the Golden Coast, and groves of orange and citron,

Sweeps with majestic curve the river away to the eastward.

They, too, swerved from their course; and, entering the Bayou of Plaquemine,

Soon were lost in a maze of sluggish and devious waters,

Which, like a network of steel, extended in every direction.

Over their heads the towering and tenebrous boughs of the cypress

Met in a dusky arch, and trailing mosses in midair 770

Waved like banners that hang on the walls of ancient cathedrals.

Deathlike the silence seemed, and unbroken, save by the herons

Home to their roosts in the cedar-trees returning at sunset,

Or by the owl, as he greeted the moon with demoniac laughter.

Lovely the moonlight was as it glanced and gleamed on the water,

Gleamed on the columns of cypress and cedar sustaining the arches,

Down through whose broken vaults it fell as through chinks in a ruin.

Dreamlike, and indistinct, and strange were all things around them;

And o'er their spirits there came a feeling of wonder and sadness, —

Strange forebodings of ill, unseen and that cannot be compassed.

750

As, at the tramp of a horse's hoof on the turf of the prairies,

Far in advance are closed the leaves of the shrinking mimosa,

So, at the hoof-beats of fate, with sad forebodings of evil,

Shrinks and closes the heart, ere the stroke of doom has attained it.

But Evangeline's heart was sustained by a vision, that faintly

Floated before her eyes, and beckoned her on through the moonlight.

It was the thought of her brain that assumed the shape of a phantom.

Through those shadowy aisles had Gabriel wandered before her,

And every stroke of the oar now brought him nearer and nearer.

Then in his place, at the prow of the boat, rose one of the oarsmen,

And, as a signal sound, if others like them peradventure

Sailed on those gloomy and midnight streams, blew a blast on his bugle.

Wild through the dark colonnades and corridors leafy the blast rang,

Breaking the seal of silence and giving tongues to the forest.

Soundless above them the banners of moss just stirred to the music.

Multitudinous echoes awoke and died in the distance, Over the watery floor, and beneath the reverberant branches; But not a voice replied; no answer came from the darkness;

And when the echoes had cersed, like a sense of pain was the silence.

Then Evangeline slept; but the boatmen rowed through the midnight,

Silent at times, then singing familiar Canadian boatsongs,

Such as they sang of old on their own Acadian rivers, While through the night were heard the mysterious sounds of the desert,

Far off, — indistinct, — as of wave or wind in the forest,

Mixed with the whoop of the crane and the roar of the grim alligator.

Thus ere another noon they emerged from the shades; and before them

Lay, in the golden sun, the lakes of the Atchafalaya. Water-lilies in myriads rocked on the slight undula-

tions

Made by the passing oars, and, resplendent in beauty,

the lotus

Lifted her golden crown above the heads of the boatmen.

810

Faint was the air with the odorous breath of magnolia blossoms,

And with the heat of noon; and numberless sylvan islands,

Fragrant and thickly embowered with blossoming hedges of roses,

Near to whose shores they glided along, invited to slumber.

Soon by the fairest of these their weary oars were suspended.

Under the boughs of Wachita willows, that grew by the margin,

Safely their boat was moored; and scattered about on the greensward,

Tired with their midnight toil, the weary travellers slumbered.

Over them vast and high extended the cope of a cedar.

Swinging from its great arms, the trumpet-flower and the grapevine 820

Hung their ladder of ropes aloft like the ladder of Jacob,

On whose pendulous stairs the angels ascending, descending,

Were the swift humming-birds, that flitted from blossom to blossom.

Such was the vision Evangeline saw as she slumbered beneath it.

Filled was her heart with love, and the dawn of an opening heaven 825

Lighted her soul in sleep with the glory of regions celestial.

Nearer, ever nearer, among the numberless islands, Darted a light, swift boat, that sped away o'er the water,

Urged on its course by the sinewy arms of hunters and trappers.

Northward its prow was turned, to the land of the bison and beaver.

At the helm sat a youth, with countenance thoughtful and careworn.

Dark and neglected locks overshadowed his brow, and a sadness

- Somewhat beyond his years on his face was legibly written.
- Gabriel was it, who, weary with waiting, unhappy and restless,
- Sought in the Western wilds oblivion of self and of sorrow.
- Swiftly they glided along, close under the lee of the island,
- But by the opposite bank, and behind a screen of palmettos;
- So that they saw not the boat, where it lay concealed in the willows;
- All undisturbed by the dash of their oars, and unseen, were the sleepers;
- Angel of God was there none to awaken the slumbering maiden.
- Swiftly they glided away, like the shade of a cloud on the prairie.
- After the sound of their oars on the tholes had died in the distance,
- As from a magic trance the sleepers awoke, and the maiden
- Said with a sigh to the friendly priest, "O Father Felician!
- Something says in my heart that near me Gabriel wanders.
- Is it a foolish dream, an idle and vague superstition?
- Or has an angel passed, and revealed the truth to my spirit?"
- Then, with a blush, she added, "Alas for my credulous fancy!
- Unto ears like thine such words as these have no meaning."
- But made answer the reverend man, and he smiled as he answered. —

- "Daughter, thy words are not idle; nor are they to me without meaning,
- Feeling is deep and still; and the word that floats on the surface
- Is as the tossing buoy, that betrays where the anchor is hidden.
- Therefore trust to thy heart, and to what the world calls illusions.
- Gabriel truly is near thee; for not far away to the southward,
- On the banks of the Têche, are the towns of St. Maur and St. Martin.
- There the long-wandering bride shall be given again to her bridegroom,
- There the long-absent pastor regain his flock and his sheepfold.
- Beautiful is the land, with its prairies and forests of fruit-trees;
- Under the feet a garden of flowers, and the bluest of heavens
- Bending above, and resting its dome on the walls of the forest.
- They who dwell there have named it the Eden of Louisiana."
 - With these words of cheer they arose and continued their journey.
- Softly the evening came. The sun from the western horizon
- Like a magician extended his golden wand o'er the landscape;
- Twinkling vapors arose; and sky and water and forest Seemed all on fire at the touch, and melted and mingled together.

- Hanging between two skies, a cloud with edges of silver,
- Floated the boat, with its dripping oars, on the motionless water.
- Filled was Evangeline's heart with inexpressible sweetness. 870
- Touched by the magic spell, the sacred fountains of feeling
- Glowed with the light of love, as the skies and waters around her.
- Then from a neighboring thicket the mocking-bird, wildest of singers,
- Swinging aloft on a willow spray that hung o'er the water,
- Shook from his little throat such floods of delirious music, 875
- That the whole air and the woods and the waves seemed silent to listen.
- Plaintive at first were the tones and sad; then soaring to madness
- Seemed they to follow or guide the revel of frenzied Bacchantes.
- Single notes were then heard, in sorrowful, low lamentation:
- Till, having gathered them all, he flung them abroad in derision,
- As when, after a storm, a gust of wind through the tree-tops
- Shakes down the rattling rain in a crystal shower on the branches.

878. The Bacchantes were worshippers of the god Bacchus, who in Greek mythology presided over the vine and its fruits. They gave themselves up to all manner of excess, and their songs and dances were to wild, intoxicating measures.

With such a prelude as this, and hearts that throbbed with emotion,

Slowly they entered the Têche, where it flows through the green Opelousas,

And, through the amber air, above the crest of the woodland,

Saw the column of smoke that arose from a neighboring dwelling; —

Sounds of a horn they heard, and the distant lowing of cattle.

III.

Near to the bank of the river, o'ershadowed by oaks from whose branches

Garlands of Spanish moss and of mystic mistletoe flaunted,

Such as the Druids cut down with golden hatchets at Yule-tide,

Stood, secluded and still, the house of the herdsman.

A garden

Girded it round about with a belt of luxuriant blossoms,

Filling the air with fragrance. The house itself was of timbers

Hewn from the cypress-tree, and carefully fitted together.

Large and low was the roof; and on slender columns supported,

895

Rose-wreathed, vine-encircled, a broad and spacious veranda,

Haunt of the humming-bird and the bee, extended around it.

At each end of the house, amid the flowers of the garden,

- Stationed the dove-cots were, as love's perpetual symbol,
- Scenes of endless wooing, and endless contentions of rivals.
- Silence reigned o'er the place. The line of shadow and sunshine
- Ran near the tops of the trees; but the house itself was in shadow,
- And from its chimney-top, ascending and slowly expanding
- Into the evening air, a thin blue column of smoke rose.
- In the rear of the house, from the garden gate, ran a pathway 905
- Through the great groves of oak to the skirts of the limitless prairie,
- Into whose sea of flowers the sun was slowly descending.
- Full in his track of light, like ships with shadowy canvas
- Hanging loose from their spars in a motionless calm in the tropics,
- Stood a cluster of trees, with tangled cordage of grapevines.
 - Just where the woodlands met the flowery surf of the prairie,
- Mounted upon his horse, with Spanish saddle and stirrups,
- Sat a herdsman, arrayed in gaiters and doublet of deerskin.
- Broad and brown was the face that from under the Spanish sombrero
- Gazed on the peaceful scene, with the lordly look of its master.

Round about him were numberless herds of kine that were grazing

Quietly in the meadows, and breathing the vapory freshness

That uprose from the river, and spread itself over the landscape.

Slowly lifting the horn that hung at his side, and expanding

Fully his broad, deep chest, he blew a blast, that resounded

Wildly and sweet and far, through the still damp air of the evening.

Suddenly out of the grass the long white horns of the cattle

Rose like flakes of foam on the adverse currents of ocean.

Silent a moment they gazed, then bellowing rushed o'er the prairie,

And the whole mass became a cloud, a shade in the distance.

Then, as the herdsman turned to the house, through the gate of the garden

Saw he the forms of the priest and the maiden advancing to meet him.

Suddenly down from his horse he sprang in amazement, and forward

Pushed with extended arms and exclamations of wonder;

When they beheld his face, they recognized Basil the blacksmith.

930

Hearty his welcome was, as he led his guests to the garden.

There in an arbor of roses with endless question and answer

Gave they vent to their hearts, and renewed their friendly embraces,

Laughing and weeping by turns, or sitting silent and thoughtful.

Thoughtful, for Gabriel came not; and now dark doubts and misgivings

Stole o'er the maiden's heart; and Basil, somewhat embarrassed.

Broke the silence and said, "If you came by the Atchafalaya,

How have you nowhere encountered my Gabriel's boat on the bayous?"

Over Evangeline's face at the words of Basil a shade passed.

Tears came into her eyes, and she said, with a tremulous accent,

"Gone? is Gabriel gone?" and, concealing her face on his shoulder,

All her o'erburdened heart gave way, and she wept and lamented.

Then the good Basil said, — and his voice grew blithe as he said it, —

"Be of good cheer, my child; it is only to-day he departed.

Foolish boy! he has left me alone with my herds and my horses.

Moody and restless grown, and tried and troubled, his spirit

Could no longer endure the calm of this quiet existence.

Thinking ever of thee, uncertain and sorrowful ever, Ever silent, or speaking only of thee and his troubles,

He at length had become so tedious to men and to maidens,

- Tedious even to me, that at length I bethought me, and sent him
- Unto the town of Adayes to trade for mules with the Spaniards.
- Thence he will follow the Indian trails to the Ozark Mountains,
- Hunting for furs in the forests, on rivers trapping the beaver.
- Therefore be of good cheer; we will follow the fugitive lover;
- He is not far on his way, and the Fates and the streams are against him.
- Up and away to-morrow, and through the red dew of the morning,
- We will follow him fast, and bring him back to his prison."
 - Then glad voices were heard, and up from the banks of the river,
- Borne aloft on his comrades' arms, came Michael the fiddler.
- Long under Basil's roof had he lived, like a god on Olympus,
- Having no other care than dispensing music to mortals.
- Far renowned was he for his silver locks and his fiddle.
- "Long live Michael," they cried, "our brave Acadian minstrel!"
- As they bore him aloft in triumphal procession; and straightway 965
- Father Felician advanced with Evangeline, greeting the old man
- Kindly and oft, and recalling the past, while Basil, enraptured,

- Hailed with hilarious joy his old companions and gos-sips,
- Laughing loud and long, and embracing mothers and daughters.
- Much they marvelled to see the wealth of the ci-devant blacksmith,
- All his domains and his herds, and his patriarchal demeanor;
- Much they marvelled to hear his tales of the soil and the climate,
- And of the prairies, whose numberless herds were his who would take them;
- Each one thought in his heart, that he, too, would go and do likewise.
- Thus they ascended the steps, and, crossing the breezy veranda,
- Entered the hall of the house, where already the supper of Basil
- Waited his late return; and they rested and feasted together.
 - Over the joyous feast the sudden darkness descended.
- All was silent without, and, illuming the landscape with silver,
- Fair rose the dewy moon and the myriad stars; but within doors,
- Brighter than these, shone the faces of friends in the glimmering lamplight.
- Then from his station aloft, at the head of the table, the herdsman
- Poured forth his heart and his wine together in endless profusion.
- Lighting his pipe, that was filled with sweet Natchitoches tobacco,

- Thus he spake to his guests, who listened, and smiled as they listened:—

 985
- "Welcome once more, my friends, who long have been friendless and homeless,
- Welcome once more to a home, that is better perchance than the old one!
- Here no hungry winter congeals our blood like the rivers;
- Here no stony ground provokes the wrath of the farmer;
- Smoothly the ploughshare runs through the soil, as a keel through the water.
- All the year round the orange-groves are in blossom; and grass grows
- More in a single night than a whole Canadian summer.
- Here, too, numberless herds run wild and unclaimed in the prairies;
- Here, too, lands may be had for the asking, and forests of timber
- With a few blows of the axe are hewn and framed into houses.
- After your houses are built, and your fields are yellow with harvests,
- No King George of England shall drive you away from your homesteads,
- Burning your dwellings and barns, and stealing your farms and your cattle."
- Speaking these words, he blew a wrathful cloud from his nostrils,
- While his huge, brown hand came thundering down on the table,
- So that the guests all started; and Father Felician, astounded,
- Suddenly paused, with a pinch of snuff half-way to his nostrils.

But the brave Basil resumed, and his words were milder and gaver: -

"Only beware of the fever, my friends, beware of the fever!

For it is not like that of our cold Acadian climate, 1005 Cured by wearing a spider hung round one's neck in a nutshell!"

Then there were voices heard at the door, and footsteps approaching

Sounded upon the stairs and the floor of the breezy veranda.

It was the neighboring Creoles and small Acadian planters,

Who had been summoned all to the house of Basil the herdsman. 1010

Merry the meeting was of ancient comrades and neighbors:

Friend clasped friend in his arms; and they who before were as strangers,

Meeting in exile, became straightway as friends to each other.

Drawn by the gentle bond of a common country together.

But in the neighboring hall a strain of music, proceeding 1015

From the accordant strings of Michael's melodious fiddle.

Broke up all further speech. Away, like children delighted,

All things forgotten beside, they gave themselves to the maddening

Whirl of the dizzy dance, as it swept and swaved to the music,

Dreamlike, with beaming eyes and the rush of fluttering garments. 1020

- Meanwhile, apart, at the head of the hall, the priest and the herdsman
- Sat, conversing together of past and present and future;
- While Evangeline stood like one entranced, for within her
- Olden memories rose, and loud in the midst of the music
- Heard she the sound of the sea, and an irrepressible sadness
- Came o'er her heart, and unseen she stole forth into the garden.
- Beautiful was the night. Behind the black wall of the forest,
- Tipping its summit with silver, arose the moon. On the river
- Fell here and there through the branches a tremulous gleam of the moonlight,
- Like the sweet thoughts of love on a darkened and devious spirit.
- Nearer and round about her, the manifold flowers of the garden
- Poured out their souls in odors, that were their prayers and confessions
- Unto the night, as it went its way, like a silent Carthusian.

1033. The Carthusians are a monastic order founded in the twelfth century, perhaps the most severe in its rules of all religious societies. Almost perpetual silence is one of the vows; the monks can talk together but once a week; the labor required of them is unremitting and the discipline exceedingly rigid. The first monastery was established at Chartreux near Grenoble in France, and the Latinized form of the name has given us the word Carthusian.

Fuller of fragrance than they, and as heavy with shadows and night-dews,

Hung the heart of the maiden. The calm and the magical moonlight

Seemed to inundate her soul with indefinable longings,

As, through the garden gate, and beneath the shade of the oak-trees,

Passed she along the path to the edge of the measureless prairie.

Silent it lay, with a silvery haze upon it, and fire-flies Gleaming and floating away in mingled and infinite

Over her head the stars, the thoughts of God in the heavens,

Shone on the eyes of man, who had ceased to marvel and worship,

Save when a blazing comet was seen on the walls of that temple,

As if a hand had appeared and written upon them, "Upharsin."

And the soul of the maiden, between the stars and the fire-flies,

Wandered alone, and she cried, "O Gabriel! O my beloved!

Art thou so near unto me, and yet I cannot behold thee?

Art thou so near unto me, and yet thy voice does not reach me?

Ah! how often thy feet have trod this path to the prairie!

Ah! how often thine eyes have looked on the woodlands around me!

Ah! how often beneath this oak, returning from labor,

Thou hast lain down to rest, and to dream of me in thy slumbers!

When shall these eyes behold, these arms be folded about thee?"

Loud and sudden and near the note of a whippoorwill sounded

Like a flute in the woods; and anon, through the neighboring thickets,

Farther and farther away it floated and dropped into silence.

"Patience!" whispered the oaks from oracular caverns of darkness;

And, from the moonlit meadow, a sigh responded, "To-morrow!"

Bright rose the sun next day; and all the flowers of the garden

Bathed his shining feet with their tears, and anointed his tresses

With the delicious balm that they bore in their vases of crystal.

"Farewell!" said the priest, as he stood at the shadowy threshold;

"See that you bring us the Prodigal Son from his fasting and famine,

And, too, the Foolish Virgin, who slept when the bridegroom was coming."

"Farewell!" answered the maiden, and, smiling, with Basil descended 1065

Down to the river's brink, where the boatmen already were waiting.

Thus beginning their journey with morning, and sunshine, and gladness,

Swiftly they followed the flight of him who was speeding before them,

- Blown by the blast of fate like a dead leaf over the desert.
- Not that day, nor the next, nor yet the day that succeeded,
- Found they trace of his course, in lake or forest or river,
- Nor, after many days, had they found him; but vague and uncertain
- Rumors alone were their guides through a wild and desolate country;
- Till, at the little inn of the Spanish town of Adayes, Weary and worn, they alighted, and learned from the garrulous landlord
- That on the day before, with horses and guides and companions,
- Gabriel left the village, and took the road of the prairies.

IV.

- Far in the West there lies a desert land, where the mountains
- Lift, through perpetual snows, their lofty and luminous summits.
- Down from their jagged, deep ravines, where the gorge, like a gateway,
- Opens a passage rude to the wheels of the emigrant's wagon,
- Westward the Oregon flows and the Walleway and Owyhee.
- Eastward, with devious course, among the Wind-river Mountains,
- Through the Sweet-water Valley precipitate leaps the Nebraska;
- And to the south, from Fontaine-qui-bout and the Spanish sierras, 1085

- Fretted with sands and rocks, and swept by the wind of the desert,
- Numberless torrents, with ceaseless sound, descend to the ocean,
- Like the great chords of a harp, in loud and solemn vibrations.
- Spreading between these streams are the wondrous, beautiful prairies,
- Billowy bays of grass ever rolling in shadow and sunshine,
- Bright with luxuriant clusters of roses and purple amorphas.
- Over them wandered the buffalo herds, and the elk and the roebuck;
- Over them wandered the wolves, and herds of rider less horses;
- Fires that blast and blight, and winds that are weary with travel;
- Over them wander the scattered tribes of Ishmael's children,
- Staining the desert with blood; and above their terrible war-trails
- Circles and sails aloft, on pinions majestic, the vulture,
- Like the implacable soul of a chieftain slaughtered in battle,
- By invisible stairs ascending and scaling the heavens.
- Here and there rise smokes from the camps of these savage marauders;
- Here and there rise groves from the margins of swiftrunning rivers;
- And the grim, taciturn bear, the anchorite monk of the desert,

- Climbs down their dark ravines to dig for roots by the brook-side,
- And over all is the sky, the clear and crystalline heaven,
- Like the protecting hand of God inverted above them.
 - Into this wonderful land, at the base of the Ozark Mountains,
- Gabriel far had entered, with hunters and trappers behind him.
- Day after day, with their Indian guides, the maiden and Basil
- Followed his flying steps, and thought each day to o'ertake him.
- Sometimes they saw, or thought they saw, the smoke of his camp-fire
- Rise in the morning air from the distant plain; but at nightfall,
- When they had reached the place, they found only embers and ashes.
- And, though their hearts were sad at times and their bodies were weary,
- Hope still guided them on, as the magic Fata Morgana Showed them her lakes of light, that retreated and vanished before them.
- 1114. The Italian name for a meteoric phenomenon nearly allied to a mirage, witnessed in the Straits of Messina, and less frequently elsewhere, and consisting in the appearance in the air over the sea of the objects which are upon the neighboring coasts. In the southwest of our own country, the mirage is very common, of lakes which stretch before the tired traveller, and the deception is so great that parties have sometimes beckened to other travellers, who seemed to be wading knee-deep, to come over to them where dry land was.

Once, as they sat by their evening fire, there silently entered

Into the little camp an Indian woman, whose features Wore deep traces of sorrow, and patience as great as her sorrow.

She was a Shawnee woman returning home to her people,

From the far-off hunting-grounds of the cruel Camanches,

Where her Canadian husband, a coureur-des-bois, had been murdered.

Touched were their hearts at her story, and warmest and friendliest welcome

Gave they, with words of cheer, and she sat and feasted among them

On the buffalo-meat and the venison cooked on the embers.

But when their meal was done, and Basil and all his companions,

Worn with the long day's march and the chase of the deer and the bison,

Stretched themselves on the ground, and slept where the quivering fire-light

Flashed on their swarthy cheeks, and their forms wrapped up in their blankets,

Then at the door of Evangeline's tent she sat and repeated

Slowly, with soft, low voice, and the charm of her Indian accent,

All the tale of her love, with its pleasures, and pains, and reverses.

Much Evangeline wept at the tale, and to know that another

Hapless heart like her own had loved and had been disappointed.

Moved to the depths of her soul by pity and woman's compassion,

Yet in her sorrow pleased that one who had suffered was near her,

She in turn related her love and all its disasters.

Mute with wonder the Shawnee sat, and when she had ended

Still was mute; but at length, as if a mysterious horror

Passed through her brain, she spake, and repeated the tale of the Mowis;

Mowis, the bridegroom of snow, who won and wedded a maiden,

But, when the morning came, arose and passed from the wigwam,

Fading and melting away and dissolving into the sunshine,

Till she beheld him no more, though she followed far into the forest.

Then, in those sweet, low tones, that seemed like a weird incantation,

Told she the tale of the fair Lilinau, who was wooed by a phantom,

That, through the pines o'er her father's lodge, in the hush of the twilight,

Breathed like the evening wind, and whispered love to the maiden,

Till she followed his green and waving plume through the forest,

And nevermore returned, nor was seen again by her people.

1145. The story of Lilinau and other Indian legends will be found in H. R. Schoolcraft's Algic Researches.

- Silent with wonder and strange surprise, Evangeline listened 1150
- To the soft flow of her magical words, till the region around her
- Seemed like enchanted ground, and her swarthy guest the enchantress.
- Slowly over the tops of the Ozark Mountains the moon rose,
- Lighting the little tent, and with a mysterious splendor
- Touching the sombre leaves, and embracing and filling the woodland.

- With a delicious sound the brook rushed by, and the
- Swayed and sighed overhead in scarcely audible whispers.
- Filled with the thoughts of love was Evangeline's heart, but a secret,
- Subtile sense crept in of pain and indefinite terror,
- As the cold, poisonous snake creeps into the nest of the swallow.
- It was no earthly fear. A breath from the region of spirits
- Seemed to float in the air of night; and she felt for a moment
- That, like the Indian maid, she, too, was pursuing a phantom.
- With this thought she slept, and the fear and the phantom had vanished.
 - Early upon the morrow the march was resumed, and the Shawnee
- Said, as they journeyed along, "On the western slope of these mountains

- Dwells in his little village the Black Robe chief of the Mission.
- Much he teaches the people, and tells them of Mary and Jesus;
- Loud laugh their hearts with joy, and weep with pain, as they hear him."
- Then, with a sudden and secret emotion, Evangeline answered,
- "Let us go to the Mission, for there good tidings await us!"
- Thither they turned their steeds; and behind a spur of the mountains,
- Just as the sun went down, they heard a murmur of voices,
- And in a meadow green and broad, by the bank of a river,
- Saw the tents of the Christians, the tents of the Jesuit Mission.
- Under a towering oak, that stood in the midst of the village,
- Knelt the Black Robe chief with his children. A crucifix fastened
- High on the trunk of the tree, and overshadowed by grapevines,
- Looked with its agonized face on the multitude kneeling beneath it.
- This was their rural chapel. Aloft, through the intricate arches
- Of its aerial roof, arose the chant of their vespers,
- Mingling its notes with the soft susurrus and sighs of the branches.
- Silent, with heads uncovered, the travellers, nearer approaching,
- Knelt on the swarded floor, and joined in the evening devotions.

- But when the service was done, and the benediction had fallen
- Forth from the hands of the priest, like seed from the hands of the sower,
- Slowly the reverend man advanced to the strangers, and bade them
- Welcome; and when they replied, he smiled with benignant expression,
- Hearing the homelike sounds of his mother-tongue in the forest,
- And, with words of kindness, conducted them into his wigwam.
- There upon mats and skins they reposed, and on cakes of the maize-ear
- Feasted, and slaked their thirst from the water-gourd of the teacher.
- Soon was their story told; and the priest with solemnity answered:—
- "Not six suns have risen and set since Gabriel, seated On this mat by my side, where now the maiden reposes,
- Told me this same sad tale; then arose and continued his journey!"
- Soft was the voice of the priest, and he spake with an accent of kindness;
- But on Evangeline's heart fell his words as in winter the snow-flakes
- Fall into some lone nest from which the birds have departed.
- "Far to the north he has gone," continued the priest;

 "but in autumn,
- When the chase is done, will return again to the Mission."
- Then Evangeline said, and her voice was meek and submissive,

- "Let me remain with thee, for my soul is sad and afflicted."
- So seemed it wise and well unto all; and betimes on the morrow,
- Mounting his Mexican steed, with his Indian guides and companions, 1205
- Homeward Basil returned, and Evangeline stayed at the Mission.
 - Slowly, slowly the days succeeded each other, —
- Days and weeks and months; and the fields of maize that were springing
- Green from the ground when a stranger she came, now waving about her,
- Lifted their slender shafts, with leaves interlacing, and forming
- Cloisters for mendicant crows and granaries pillaged by squirrels.
- Then in the golden weather the maize was husked, and the maidens
- Blushed at each blood-red ear, for that betokened a lover,
- But at the crooked laughed, and called it a thief in the corn-field.
- Even the blood-red ear to Evangeline brought not her lover.

- "Patience!" the priest would say; "have faith, and thy prayer will be answered!
- Look at this vigorous plant that lifts its head from the meadow,
- See how its leaves are turned to the north, as true as the magnet;

It is the compass-flower, that the finger of God has planted

Here in the houseless wild, to direct the traveller's journey

Over the sea-like, pathless, limitless waste of the desert.

Such in the soul of man is faith. The blossoms of passion,

Gay and luxuriant flowers, are brighter and fuller of fragrance,

But they beguile us, and lead us astray, and their odor is deadly.

Only this humble plant can guide us here, and hereafter 1225

Crown us with asphodel flowers, that are wet with the dews of nepenthe."

So came the autumn, and passed, and the winter—yet Gabriel came not;

Blossomed the opening spring, and the notes of the robin and bluebird

Sounded sweet upon wold and in wood, yet Gabriel came not.

But on the breath of the summer winds a rumor was wafted

1219. Silphium laciniatum or compass-plant is found on the prairies of Michigan and Wisconsin and to the south and west, and is said to present the edges of the lower leaves due north and south.

1226. In early Greek poetry the asphodel meadows were haunted by the shades of heroes. See Homer's Odyssey, xxiv. 13, where Pope translates:—

"In ever flowering meads of Asphodel."

The asphodel is of the lily family, and is known also by the name king's spear.

- Sweeter than song of bird, or hue or odor of blossom.
- Far to the north and east, it said, in the Michigan forests,
- Gabriel had his lodge by the banks of the Saginaw River.
- And, with returning guides, that sought the lakes of St. Lawrence,
- Saying a sad farewell, Evangeline went from the Mission.

 1235
- When over weary ways, by long and perilous marches,
- She had attained at length the depths of the Michigan forests,
- Found she the hunter's lodge deserted and fallen to ruin!
 - Thus did the long sad years glide on, and in seasons and places
- Divers and distant far was seen the wandering maiden; 1240
- Now in the Tents of Grace of the meek Moravian Missions,
- Now in the noisy camps and the battle-fields of the army,
- Now in secluded hamlets, in towns and populous cities.
- Like a phantom she came, and passed away unremembered.
- Fair was she and young, when in hope began the long journey;
- Faded was she and old, when in disappointment it ended.
 - 1241. A rendering of the Moravian Gnadenhütten.

- Each succeeding year stole something away from her beauty,
- Leaving behind it, broader and deeper, the gloom and the shadow.
- Then there appeared and spread faint streaks of gray o'er her forehead,
- Dawn of another life, that broke o'er her earthly horizon,
- As in the eastern sky the first faint streaks of the morning.

v.

- In that delightful land which is washed by the Delaware's waters,
- Guarding in sylvan shades the name of Penn the apostle,
- Stands on the banks of its beautiful stream the city he founded.
- There all the air is balm, and the peach is the emblem of beauty,

 1255
- And the streets still reëcho the names of the trees of the forest,
- As if they fain would appease the Dryads whose haunts they molested.
- There from the troubled sea had Evangeline landed, an exile,
- Finding among the children of Penn a home and a country.
- There old René Leblanc had died; and when he departed,
- Saw at his side only one of all his hundred descendants.
- 1256. The streets of Philadelphia, as is well known, are many of them, especially those running east and west, named for trees, as Chestnut, Walnut, Locust, Spruce, Pine, etc.

Something at least there was in the friendly streets of the city,

Something that spake to her heart, and made her no longer a stranger;

And her ear was pleased with the Thee and Thou of the Quakers,

For it recalled the past, the old Acadian country, Where all men were equal, and all were brothers and sisters.

So, when the fruitless search, the disappointed endeavor,

Ended, to recommence no more upon earth, uncomplaining,

Thither, as leaves to the light, were turned her thoughts and her footsteps.

As from a mountain's top the rainy mists of the morning 1270

Roll away, and afar we behold the landscape below us, Sun-illumined, with shining rivers and cities and hamlets,

So fell the mists from her mind, and she saw the world far below her,

Dark no longer, but all illumined with love; and the pathway

Which she had climbed so far, lying smooth and fair in the distance.

1275

Gabriel was not forgotten. Within her heart was his image,

Clothed in the beauty of love and youth, as last she beheld him,

Only more beautiful made by his deathlike silence and absence.

Into her thoughts of him time entered not, for it was not.

Over him years had no power; he was not changed, but transfigured;

He had become to her heart as one who is dead, and not absent;

Patience and abnegation of self, and devotion to others, This was the lesson a life of trial and sorrow had taught her.

So was her love diffused, but, like to some odorous spices,

Suffered no waste nor loss, though filling the air with aroma.

Other hope had she none, nor wish in life, but to follow, Meekly with reverent steps, the sacred feet of her Saviour.

Thus many years she lived as a Sister of Mercy; frequenting

Lonely and wretched roofs in the crowded lanes of the city,

Where distress and want concealed themselves from the sunlight,

Where disease and sorrow in garrets languished neglected.

Night after night when the world was asleep, as the watchman repeated

Loud, through the gusty streets, that all was well in the city,

High at some lonely window he saw the light of her taper.

Day after day, in the gray of the dawn, as slow through the suburbs

Plodded the German farmer, with flowers and fruits for the market,

Met he that meek, pale face, returning home from its watchings.

Then it came to pass that a pestilence fell on the city,

Presaged by wondrous signs, and mostly by flocks of wild pigeons,

Darkening the sun in their flight, with naught in their craws but an acorn.

And, as the tides of the sea arise in the month of September,

Flooding some silver stream, till it spreads to a lake in the meadow,

So death flooded life, and, o'erflowing its natural margin,

Spread to a brackish lake the silver stream of existence.

Wealth had no power to bribe, nor beauty to charm, the oppressor;

But all perished alike beneath the scourge of his anger;—

Only, alas! the poor, who had neither friends nor attendants,

Crept away to die in the almshouse, home of the homeless.

Then in the suburbs it stood, in the midst of meadows and woodlands:—

1298. The year 1793 was long remembered as the year when yellow fever was a terrible pestilence in Philadelphia. Charles Brockden Brown made his novel of Arthur Mervyn turn largely upon the incidents of the plague, which drove Brown away from home for a time.

1308. Philadelphians have identified the old Friends' almshouse on Walnut Street, now no longer standing, as that in which Evangeline ministered to Gabriel, and so real was the story that some even ventured to point out the graves of the two lovers. See Westcott's The Historic Mansions of Philadelphia, pp. 101, 102.

Now the city surrounds it; but still, with its gateway and wicket

Meek, in the midst of splendor, its humble walls seem to echo

Softly the words of the Lord:—"The poor ye always have with you."

Thither, by night and by day, came the Sister of Mercy. The dying

Looked up into her face, and thought, indeed, to behold there

Gleams of celestial light encircle her forehead with splendor,

Such as the artist paints o'er the brows of saints and apostles,

Or such as hangs by night o'er a city seen at a distance. Unto their eyes it seemed the lamps of the city celestial.

Into whose shining gates erelong their spirits would enter.

Thus, on a Sabbath morn, through the streets, deserted and silent,

Wending her quiet way, she entered the door of the almshouse.

Sweet on the summer air was the odor of flowers in the garden,

And she paused on her way to gather the fairest among them,

That the dying once more might rejoice in their fragrance and beauty.

Then, as she mounted the stairs to the corridors, cooled by the east-wind,

Distant and soft on her ear fell the chimes from the belfry of Christ Church,

- While, intermingled with these, across the meadows were wafted
- Sounds of psalms, that were sung by the Swedes in their church at Wicaco.
- Soft as descending wings fell the calm of the hour on her spirit;
- Something within her said, "At length thy trials are ended;"
- And, with light in her looks, she entered the chambers of sickness.
- Noiselessly moved about the assiduous, careful attendants,
- Moistening the feverish lip, and the aching brow, and in silence
- Closing the sightless eyes of the dead, and concealing their faces,
- Where on their pallets they lay, like drifts of snow by the roadside.
- Many a languid head, upraised as Evangeline entered, Turned on its pillow of pain to gaze while she passed, for her presence
- Fell on their hearts like a ray of the sun on the walls of a prison.
- And, as she looked around, she saw how Death, the consoler,
- Laying his hand upon many a heart, had healed it forever.

1328. The Swedes' church at Wicaco is still standing, the oldest in the city of Philadelphia, having been begun in 1698. Wicaco is within the city, on the banks of the Delaware River. An interesting account of the old church and its historic associations will be found in Westcott's book just mentioned, pp. 56–67. Wilson the ornithologist lies buried in the churchyard adjoining the church.

Many familiar forms had disappeared in the night time;

Vacant their places were, or filled already by strangers.

Suddenly, as if arrested by fear or a feeling of wonder,

Still she stood, with her colorless lips apart, while a shudder

Ran through her frame, and, forgotten, the flowerets dropped from her fingers, 1345

And from her eyes and cheeks the light and bloom of the morning.

Then there escaped from her lips a cry of such terrible anguish,

That the dying heard it, and started up from their pillows.

On the pallet before her was stretched the form of an old man.

Long, and thin, and gray were the locks that shaded his temples;

But, as he lay in the morning light, his face for a moment

Seemed to assume once more the forms of its earlier manhood;

So are wont to be changed the faces of those who are dying.

Hot and red on his lips still burned the flush of the fever,

As if life, like the Hebrew, with blood had besprinkled its portals,

That the Angel of Death might see the sign, and pass over.

Motionless, senseless, dying, he lay, and his spirit exhausted

- Seemed to be sinking down through infinite depths in the darkness,
- Darkness of slumber and death, forever sinking and sinking.
- Then through those realms of shade, in multiplied reverberations,
- Heard he that cry of pain, and through the hush that succeeded
- Whispered a gentle voice, in accents tender and saintlike,
- "Gabriel! O my beloved!" and died away into silence.
- Then he beheld, in a dream, once more the home of his childhood;
- Green Acadian meadows, with sylvan rivers among them,
- Village, and mountain, and woodlands; and, walking under their shadow,
- As in the days of her youth, Evangeline rose in his vision.
- Tears came into his eyes; and as slowly he lifted his eyelids,
- Vanished the vision away, but Evangeline knelt by his bedside.
- Vainly he strove to whisper her name, for the accents unuttered
- Died on his lips, and their motion revealed what his tongue would have spoken.
- Vainly he strove to rise; and Evangeline, kneeling beside him,
- Kissed his dying lips, and laid his head on her bosom. Sweet was the light of his eyes; but it suddenly sank
 - weet was the light of his eyes; but it suddenly sank into darkness,
- As when a lamp is blown out by a gust of wind at a casement.

- All was ended now, the hope, and the fear, and the sorrow,
- All the aching of heart, the restless, unsatisfied longing,
- All the dull, deep pain, and constant anguish of patience!
- And, as she pressed once more the lifeless head to her bosom,
- Meekly she bowed her own, and murmured, "Father, I thank thee!"
 - Still stands the forest primeval; but far away from its shadow,
- Side by side, in their nameless graves, the lovers are sleeping.
- Under the humble walls of the little Catholic churchyard,
- In the heart of the city, they lie, unknown and unnoticed.
- Daily the tides of life go ebbing and flowing beside them,
- Thousands of throbbing hearts, where theirs are at rest and forever,
- Thousands of aching brains, where theirs no longer are busy,
- Thousands of toiling hands, where theirs have ceased from their labors,
- Thousands of weary feet, where theirs have completed their journey!
 - Still stands the forest primeval; but under the shade of its branches
- Dwells another race, with other customs and language.

100 HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

Only along the shore of the mournful and misty
Atlantic

Linger a few Acadian peasants, whose fathers from exile

Wandered back to their native land to die in its bosom.

In the fisherman's cot the wheel and the loom are still busy;

Maidens still wear their Norman caps and their kirtles of homespun,

And by the evening fire repeat Evangeline's story,

While from its rocky caverns the deep-voiced, neighboring ocean

Speaks, and in accents disconsolate answers the wail of the forest.

THE COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH.

[This poem, also written in hexameters, has yet a lighter, quicker movement, due to the more playful character of the narrative. A slight change of accent in the first line prepares one for this livelier pace, and the reader will find that the lights and shades of the story use whatever elasticity there is in the hexameter, crisp, varying lines alternating with the steady pulse of the dactyl. The poet has built upon a slight tradition which has come down to us from the days of the Plymouth settlement, a story which depicts in a succession of scenes the life of the Old Colony. In doing this he has not cared to follow explicitly the succession of events, but has been true to the general history of the time, and has in each picture copied faithfully the essential characteristics of the original. He has taken the somewhat dry and unimaginative chronicles of the time, and touched them with a poetic light and warmth, and the reader of this poem who resumes such a book as Dr. Young's "Chronicles of the Pilgrims" will find the simple story of the early settlers to have gained in beauty. The poem was published in 1858.]

MILES STANDISH.

In the Old Colony days, in Plymouth the land of the Pilgrims,

To and fro in a room of his simple and primitive dwelling,

- 1. The Old Colony is the name which has long been applied to that part of Massachusetts which was occupied by the Plymouth colonists whose first settlement was in 1620. Massachusetts Bay was the name by which was known the later collection of settlements made about Boston and Salem.
- 2. The first houses of the Pilgrims were of logs filled in with mortar and covered with thatch.

- Clad in doublet and hose, and boots of Cordovan leather,
- Strode, with a martial air, Miles Standish the Puritan Captain.
- Buried in thought he seemed, with his hands behind him, and pausing
- Ever and anon to behold his glittering weapons of warfare,
- Hanging in shining array along the walls of the chamber, —
- Cutlass and corselet of steel, and his trusty sword of Damascus,
- Curved at the point and inscribed with its mystical Arabic sentence,
- While underneath, in a corner, were fowling-piece, musket, and matchlock.
- 3. Cordova in Spain was celebrated for a preparation of goat-skin which took the name of Cordovan. Hence came cordwain, or Spanish tanned goat-skin, and in England shoemakers are still often called cordwainers. In France, too, the same word gave cordonnier.
- 8. The corselet was a light breastplate of armor. One of Standish's grandsons is said to have been in possession of his coat-of-mail. His sword is in the cabinet of the Massachusetts Historical Society. As "the identical sword-blade used by Miles Standish" is also in possession of the Pilgrim Society of Plymouth, the antiquary may take his choice between them, or credit Standish with a change of weapons. Damascus blades are swords or cimeters presenting upon their surface a variegated appearance of watering, as white, silvery, or black veins in fine lines and fillets. Such engraved blades were common in the East, and the most famous came from Damascus; the exact secret of the workmanship has never been fully discovered in the West.
- 10. A fowling-piece is a light gun for shooting birds; a match-lock was a musket, the lock of which held a match or piece of twisted rope prepared to retain fire. As late as 1687 match-locks were used instead of flint-locks, which had then come into

- Short of stature he was, but strongly built and athletic,
- Broad in the shoulders, deep-chested, with muscles and sinews of iron;
- Brown as a nut was his face, but his russet beard was already
- Flaked with patches of snow, as hedges sometimes in November.
- Near him was seated John Alden, his friend and household companion,
- Writing with diligent speed at a table of pine by the window;
- Fair-haired, azure-eyed, with delicate Saxon complexion,
- Having the dew of his youth, and the beauty thereof, as the captives

general use. In Bradford and Winslow's Journal (Young's Chronicles of the Pilgrims, p. 125), we are told of a party setting out "with every man his musket, sword, and corselet, under the conduct of Captain Miles Standish." That these muskets were matchlocks, appears from another passage in the same journal (p. 142): "Then we lighted all our matches and prepared ourselves, concluding that we were near their dwellings."

15. Bradford, the historian of the Plymouth Plantation, says that John Alden, who was one of the Mayflower company, "was hired for a cooper at Southampton, where the ship victualled; and being a hopeful young man, was much desired, but left to his own liking to go or stay when he came here [to Plymouth, that is]: but he stayed and married here." In this picture of Miles Standish and John Alden, some have professed to see a miniature likeness to Oliver Cromwell and John Milton.

18. The story of the first mission to heathen England is referred to here. A monk named Gregory, in the sixth century, passed through the slave-market at Rome, and there amongst other captives he saw three fair-complexioned and fair-haired boys, in striking contrast to the dusky captives about them. He asked whence they came, and was answered, "From Britain," and that

Whom Saint Gregory saw, and exclaimed, "Not Angles but Angels."

Youngest of all was he of the men who came in the Mayflower.

Suddenly breaking the silence, the diligent scribe interrupting,

Spake, in the pride of his heart, Miles Standish the Captain of Plymouth.

"Look at these arms," he said, "the warlike weapons that hang here

Burnished and bright and clean, as if for parade or inspection!

This is the sword of Damascus I fought with in Flanders; this breastplate,

Well I remember the day! once saved my life in a skirmish;

Here in front you can see the very dint of the bullet

Fired point-blank at my heart by a Spanish arcabucero.

they were called Angli, which was the Latin form of the name by which they called themselves, and from which Anglo, England, and English are derived. "Non Angli sed Angeli," replied Gregory; "they have the face of angels, not of Angles, and they ought to be fellow heirs of heaven." Years afterward, the story runs, when Gregory was pope, he remembered the fair captives, and sent St. Augustine to carry Christianity to them. The story will be found at length in E. A. Freeman's Old English History for Children, p. 44.

25. The history of Miles Standish is not clearly known, but he was a soldier in the Low Countries during the defence of the Netherlands against the Spanish power, and the poet has made much of this little knowledge that we have.

28. Arcabucero is Spanish for archer, and the same term passed over, as weapons changed, into a musketeer and gunsmith.

- Had it not been of sheer steel, the forgotten bones of Miles Standish
- Would at this moment be mould, in their grave in the Flemish morasses."
- Thereupon answered John Alden, but looked not up from his writing:
- "Truly the breath of *the Lord hath slackened the speed of the bullet;
- He in his mercy preserved you, to be our shield and our weapon!"
- Still the Captain continued, unheeding the words of the stripling:
- "See, how bright they are burnished, as if in an arsenal hanging;
- That is because I have done it myself, and not left it to others.
- Serve yourself, would you be well served, is an excellent adage;
- So I take care of my arms, as you of your pens and your inkhorn.
- Then, too, there are my soldiers, my great, invincible army,
- Twelve men, all equipped, having each his rest and his matchlock,
- 38. There is some uncertainty about the derivation of the word inkhorn. The usual interpretation refers to the custom of scribes carrying ink in a horn attached to their dress, but some etymologists make it a corruption from inkern, the terminations erne and eron coming from the Saxon ern, earn, a secret place to put anything in, inkern being thus a little vessel into which we put ink.
- 39. The formation of the military company was due chiefly to the serious losses that befel the Pilgrims during the first winter, leading them to make careful provision against surprises and attacks from the Indians.

Eighteen shillings a month, together with diet and pillage,

And, like Cæsar, I know the name of each of my soldiers!"

This he said with a smile, that danced in his eyes, as the sunbeams

Dance on the waves of the sea, and vanish again in a moment.

Alden laughed as he wrote, and still the Captain continued:

"Look! you can see from this window my brazen howitzer planted

High on the roof of the church, a preacher who speaks to the purpose,

Steady, straightforward, and strong, with irresistible logic,

Orthodox, flashing conviction right into the hearts of the heathen.

Now we are ready, I think, for any assault of the Indians:

Let them come, if they like, and the sooner they try it the better, —

Let them come if they like, be it sagamore, sachem, or pow-wow,

Aspinet, Samoset, Corbitant, Squanto, or Tokamahamon!"

47. One of the earliest structures raised by the Pilgrims was a platform upon the hill overlooking the settlement, where they mounted five guns. They had also a common house for rendezvous, nineteen feet square, but the planting of guns upon the log-built meeting-house belongs to a later date.

52. The sagamore was an Indian chief of the subordinate class; the sachem a principal chief; the pow-wow a medicine man or conjurer.

53. Names of Indians who are mentioned in the early chronicles.

- Long at the window he stood, and wistfully gazed on the landscape,
- Washed with a cold gray mist, the vapory breath of the east-wind,

 55
- Forest and meadow and hill, and the steel-blue rim of the ocean,
- Lying silent and sad, in the afternoon shadows and sunshine.
- Over his countenance flitted a sliadow like those on the landscape,
- Gloom intermingled with light; and his voice was subdued with emotion,
- Tenderness, pity, regret, as after a pause he proceeded:
- "Yonder there, on the hill by the sea, lies buried Rose Standish;
- Beautiful rose of love, that bloomed for me by the wayside!
- She was the first to die of all who came in the Mayflower!
- Green above her is growing the field of wheat we have sown there,
- Better to hide from the Indian scouts the graves of our people,
- Lest they should count them and see how many already have perished!"
- Sadly his face he averted, and strode up and down, and was thoughtful.
 - Fixed to the opposite wall was a shelf of books, and among them
- 64. The dead were buried on a bluff by the water-side during that first terrible winter, and the marks of burial were carefully effaced, lest the Indians should discover how the colony had been weakened. The tradition is preserved in Holmes's Annals.

Prominent three, distinguished alike for bulk and for binding;

Barriffe's Artillery Guide, and the Commentaries of Cæsar,

Out of the Latin translated by Arthur Goldinge of London,

And, as if guarded by these, between them was standing the Bible.

Musing a moment before them, Miles Standish paused, as if doubtful

Which of the three he should choose for his consolation and comfort,

Whether the wars of the Hebrews, the famous campaigns of the Romans, 75

Or the Artillery practice, designed for belligerent Christians.

Finally down from its shelf he dragged the ponderous Roman,

Seated himself at the window, and opened the book, and in silence

70. The elaborate title of Standish's military book was: "Militarie Discipline: or the Young Artillery Man, Wherein is Discoursed and Shown the Postures both of Musket and Pike, the Exactest way, &c., Together with the Exercise of the Foot in their Motions, with much variety: As also, diverse and several Forms for the Imbatteling small or great Bodies demonstrated by the number of a single Company with their Reducements. Very necessary for all such as are Studious in the Art Military. Whereunto is also added the Postures and Beneficiall Use of the Halfe-Pike joyned with the Musket. With the way to draw up the Swedish Brigade. By Colonel William Barriffe." Barriffe was a Puritan, and added to his title-page: "Psalmes 144: 1. Blessed be the Lord my Strength which teacheth my hands to warre and my fingers to fight."

71. Goldinge was a voluminous translator, and his translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses was highly regarded. He was patronized by Sir Philip Sidney.

- Turned o'er the well-worn leaves, where thumb-marks thick on the margin,
- Like the trample of feet, proclaimed the battle was hottest.
- Nothing was heard in the room but the hurrying pen of the stripling,
- Busily writing epistles important, to go by the Mayflower.
- Ready to sail on the morrow, or next day at latest, God willing!
- Homeward bound with the tidings of all that terrible winter.
- Letters written by Alden, and full of the name of Priscilla.
- Full of the name and the fame of the Puritan maiden Priscilla!

II. LOVE AND FRIENDSHIP.

Nothing was heard in the room but the hurrying pen of the stripling,

Or an occasional sigh from the laboring heart of the Captain,

- Reading the marvellous words and achievements of Julius Cæsar.
- After a while he exclaimed, as he smote with his hand, palm downwards,
- 82. The Mayflower began her return voyage April 5, 1621. Not a single one of the emigrants returned in her, in spite of the "terrible winter."
- 85. Among the names of the Mayflower company are those of "Mr. William Mullines and his wife, and 2 children, Joseph and Priscila; and a servant, Robart Carter."

Heavily on the page: "A wonderful man was this Cæsar!

You are a writer, and I am a fighter, but here is a fellow

Who could both write and fight, and in both was equally skilful!"

Straightway answered and spake John Alden, the comely, the youthful:

"Yes, he was equally skilled, as you say, with his pen and his weapons.

Somewhere have I read, but where I forget, he could dictate

Seven letters at once, at the same time writing his memoirs."

"Truly," continued the Captain, not heeding or hearing the other,

"Truly a wonderful man was Caius Julius Cæsar!

Better be first, he said, in a little Iberian village, 100
Than be second in Rome, and I think he was right when he said it.

Twice was he married before he was twenty, and many times after:

Battles five hundred he fought, and a thousand cities he conquered;

He, too, fought in Flanders, as he himself has recorded;

100. "In his journey, as he was crossing the Alps and passing by a small village of the barbarians with but few inhabitants, and those wretchedly poor, his companions asked the question among themselves by way of mockery if there were any canvassing for offices there; any contention which should be uppermost, or feuds of great men one against another. To which Cæsar made answer seriously, 'For my part I had rather be the first man among these fellows, than the second man in Rome.'" Plutarch's Life of Cæsar, A. H. Clough's translation.

- Finally he was stabbed by his friend, the orator Brutus!
- Now, do you know what he did on a certain occasion in Flanders,
- When the rear-guard of his army retreated, the front giving way too,
- And the immortal Twelfth Legion was crowded so closely together
- There was no room for their swords? Why, he seized a shield from a soldier,
- Put himself straight at the head of his troops, and commanded the captains,
- Calling on each by his name, to order forward the ensigns;
- Then to widen the ranks, and give more room for their weapons;
- So he won the day, the battle of something-or-other.
- That's what I always say; if you wish a thing to be well done,
- You must do it yourself, you must not leave it to others!"
 - All was silent again; the Captain continued his reading.
- Nothing was heard in the room but the hurrying pen of the stripling
- Writing epistles important to go next day by the Mayflower,
- Filled with the name and the fame of the Puritan maiden Priscilla:
- Every sentence began or closed with the name of Priscilla,
- 113. The account of this battle will be found in Cæsar's Commentaries, book II. ch. 10.

- Till the treacherous pen, to which he confided the secret,
- Strove to betray it by singing and shouting the name of Priscilla!
- Finally closing his book, with a bang of the ponderous cover,
- Sudden and loud as the sound of a soldier grounding his musket,
- Thus to the young man spake Miles Standish the Captain of Plymouth:
- "When you have finished your work, I have something important to tell you.
- Be not however in haste; I can wait; I shall not be impatient!"
- Straightway Alden replied, as he folded the last of his letters,
- Pushing his papers aside, and giving respectful attention:
- "Speak; for whenever you speak, I am always ready to listen,
- Always ready to hear whatever pertains to Miles Standish."
- Thereupon answered the Captain, embarrassed, and culling his phrases:
- "'T is not good for a man to be alone, say the Scriptures.
- This I have said before, and again and again I repeat it;
- Every hour in the day, I think it, and feel it, and say it.
- Since Rose Standish died, my life has been weary and dreary;
- Sick at heart have I been, beyond the healing of friendship.

- Oft in my lonely hours have I thought of the maiden Priscilla.
- She is alone in the world; her father and mother and brother
- Died in the winter together; I saw her going and coming,
- Now to the grave of the dead, and now to the bed of the dying,
- Patient, courageous, and strong, and said to myself, that if ever
- There were angels on earth, as there are angels in heaven,
- Two have I seen and known; and the angel whose name is Priscilla.
- Holds in my desolate life the place which the other abandoned.
- Long have I cherished the thought, but never have dared to reveal it,
- Being a coward in this, though valiant enough for the most part.
- Go to the damsel Priscilla, the loveliest maiden of Plymouth;
- Say that a blunt old Captain, a man not of words but of actions,
- Offers his hand and his heart, the hand and heart of a soldier.
- Not in these words, you know, but this in short is my meaning;
- I am a maker of war, and not a maker of phrases.
- 139. "Mr. Molines, and his wife, his sone and his servant, dyed the first winter. Only his daughter Priscila survived and married with John Alden, who are both living and have 11 children." Bradford's History of Plymouth Plantation, p. 452.

- You, who are bred as a scholar, can say it in elegant language,
- Such as you read in your books of the pleadings and wooings of lovers,
- Such as you think best adapted to win the heart of a maiden."
 - When he had spoken, John Alden, the fair-haired, taciturn stripling,
- All aghast at his words, surprised, embarrassed, bewildered,
- Trying to mask his dismay by treating the subject with lightness,
- Trying to smile, and yet feeling his heart stand still in his bosom,
- Just as a timepiece stops in a house that is stricken by lightning,
- Thus made answer and spake, or rather stammered than answered:
- "Such a message as that, I am sure I should mangle and mar it;
- If you would have it well done, I am only repeating your maxim, —
- You must do it yourself, you must not leave it to others!"
- But with the air of a man whom nothing can turn from his purpose,
- Gravely shaking his head, made answer the Captain of Plymouth:
- "Truly the maxim is good, and I do not mean to gainsay it;
- But we must use it discreetly, and not waste powder for nothing.

- Now, as I said before, I was never a maker of phrases.
- I can march up to a fortress and summon the place to surrender,
- But march up to a woman with such a proposal, I dare not.
- I 'm not afraid of bullets, nor shot from the mouth of a cannon,
- But of a thundering 'No!' point-blank from the mouth of a woman,
- That I confess I 'm afraid of, nor am I ashamed to confess it!
- So you must grant my request, for you are an elegant scholar,
- Having the graces of speech, and skill in the turning of phrases."
- Taking the hand of his friend, who still was reluctant and doubtful.
- Holding it long in his own, and pressing it kindly, he added:
- "Though I have spoken thus lightly, yet deep is the feeling that prompts me;
- Surely you cannot refuse what I ask in the name of our friendship!"
- Then made answer John Alden: "The name of friendship is sacred;
- What you demand in that name, I have not the power to deny you!"
- So the strong will prevailed, subduing and moulding the gentler,
- Friendship prevailed over love, and Alden went on his errand.

III.

THE LOVER'S ERRAND.

- So the strong will prevailed, and Alden went on his errand,
- Out of the street of the village, and into the paths of the forest,
- Into the tranquil woods, where bluebirds and robins were building
- Towns in the populous trees, with hanging gardens of verdure,
- Peaceful, aerial cities of joy and affection and freedom.
- All around him was calm, but within him commotion and conflict,
- Love contending with friendship, and self with each generous impulse.
- To and fro in his breast his thoughts were heaving and dashing,
- As in a foundering ship, with every roll of the vessel, Washes the bitter sea, the merciless surge of the ocean!
- "Must I relinquish it all," he cried with a wild lamentation,—
- "Must I relinquish it all, the joy, the hope, the illusion?
- Was it for this I have loved, and waited, and worshipped in silence?
- Was it for this I have followed the flying feet and the shadow
- 188. Compare the populous nests in Evangeline, l. 136. In the hanging gardens of verdure there is reference to the famous hanging gardens of Babylon.

- Over the wintry sea, to the desolate shores of New England?
- Truly the heart is deceitful, and out of its depths of corruption
- Rise, like an exhalation, the misty phantoms of passion; Angels of light they seem, but are only delusions of Satan.
- All is clear to me now; I feel it, I see it distinctly!
- This is the hand of the Lord; it is laid upon me in anger,
- For I have followed too much the heart's desires and devices.
- Worshipping Astaroth blindly, and impious idols of
- This is the cross I must bear; the sin and the swift retribution."
 - So through the Plymouth woods John Alden went on his errand;
- Crossing the brook at the ford, where it brawled over pebble and shallow,
- Gathering still, as he went, the Mayflowers blooming around him,
- Fragrant, filling the air with a strange and wonderful sweetness,
- 206. Astaroth, in the Old Testament Scripture, is the form used for the principal female divinity, as Baal of the principal male divinity of the Phænicians.
- 210. The Mayflower is the well-known Epigæa repens, sometimes also called the Trailing Arbutus. The name Mayflower was familiar in England, as the application of it to the historic ship shows, but it was applied by the English, and is still, to the hawthorn. Its use here in connection with Epigæa repens dates from a very early day, some claiming that the first Pilgrims so used it, in affectionate memory of the vessel and its English flower associations.

- Children lost in the woods, and covered with leaves in their slumber.
- "Puritan flowers," he said, "and the type of Puritan maidens,
- Modest and simple and sweet, the very type of Priscilla!
- So I will take them to her; to Priscilla the Mayflower of Plymouth,
- Modest and simple and sweet, as a parting gift will I take them;
- Breathing their silent farewells, as they fade and wither and perish,
- Soon to be thrown away as is the heart of the giver."
- So through the Plymouth woods John Alden went on his errand;
- Came to an open space, and saw the disk of the ocean,
- Sailless, sombre and cold with the comfortless breath of the east-wind;
- Saw the new-built house, and people at work in a meadow;
- Heard, as he drew near the door, the musical voice of Priscilla
- Singing the hundredth Psalm, the grand old Puritan anthem,
- 224. The words in the version which Priscilla used sound somewhat rude to modern ears, but the music is substantially what we know as Old Hundred. The poet tells us (l. 231) that it was Ainsworth's translation which she used. Ainsworth became a Brownist in 1590, suffered persecution, and found refuge in Holland, where he published learned commentaries and translations. His version of Psalm c. is as follows:—
 - 1. Bow to Jehovah all the earth.
 - 2. Serve ye Jehovah with gladness; before him come with singing mirth.
 - 3. Know that Jehovah he God is. It's he that made us and not we, his flock and sheep of his feeding.

THE COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH. 119

- Music that Luther sang to the sacred words of the Psalmist,
- Full of the breath of the Lord, consoling and comforting many.
- Then, as he opened the door, he beheld the form of the maiden
- Seated beside her wheel, and the carded wool like a snow-drift
- Piled at her knee, her white hands feeding the ravenous spindle,
- While with her foot on the treadle she guided the wheel in its motion.
- Open wide on her lap lay the well-worn psalm-book of Ainsworth,
- Printed in Amsterdam, the words and the music together,
- Rough-hewn, angular notes, like stones in the wall of a churchyard,
- Darkened and overhung by the running vine of the verses.
- Such was the book from whose pages she sang the old Puritan anthem. 235
- She, the Puritan girl, in the solitude of the forest,
- Making the humble house and the modest apparel of homespun
- Beautiful with her beauty, and rich with the wealth of her being!
- Over him rushed, like a wind that is keen and cold and relentless,
- Thoughts of what might have been, and the weight and woe of his errand;
 - Oh, with confession enter ye his gates, his courtyard with praising. Confess to him, bless ye his name.
 - Because Jehovah he good is; his mercy ever is the same, and his faith unto all ages.

- All the dreams that had faded, and all the hopes that had vanished,
- All his life henceforth a dreary and tenantless mansion,
- Haunted by vain regrets, and pallid, sorrowful faces.
- Still he said to himself, and almost fiercely he said it,
- "Let not him that putteth his hand to the plough look backwards;
- Though the ploughshare cut through the flowers of life to its fountains,
- Though it pass o'er the graves of the dead and the hearths of the living,
- It is the will of the Lord; and his mercy endureth forever!"
 - So he entered the house; and the hum of the wheel and the singing
- Suddenly ceased; for Priscilla, aroused by his step on the threshold,
- Rose as he entered and gave him her hand, in signal of welcome,
- Saying, "I knew it was you, when I heard your step in the passage;
- For I was thinking of you, as I sat there singing and spinning."
- Awkward and dumb with delight, that a thought of him had been mingled
- Thus in the sacred psalm, that came from the heart of the maiden,
- Silent before her he stood, and gave her the flowers for an answer,
- Finding no words for his thought. He remembered that day in the winter,
- After the first great snow, when he broke a path from the village,

- Reeling and plunging along through the drifts that encumbered the doorway,
- Stamping the snow from his feet as he entered the house, and Priscilla 260
- Laughed at his snowy locks, and gave him a seat by the fireside,
- Grateful and pleased to know he had thought of her in the snow-storm.
- Had he but spoken then! perhaps not in vain had he spoken;
- Now it was all too late; the golden moment had vanished!
- So he stood there abashed, and gave her the flowers for an answer.
 - Then they sat down and talked of the birds and the beautiful Spring-time;
- Talked of their friends at home, and the Mayflower that sailed on the morrow.
- "I have been thinking all day," said gently the Puritan maiden,
- "Dreaming all night, and thinking all day, of the hedge-rows of England, —
- They are in blossom now, and the country is all like a garden;
- Thinking of lanes and fields, and the song of the lark and the linnet,
- Seeing the village street, and familiar faces of neighbors
- Going about as of old, and stopping to gossip together,
- And, at the end of the street, the village church, with the ivy
- Climbing the old gray tower, and the quiet graves in the churchyard.

- Kind are the people I live with, and dear to me my religion;
- Still my heart is so sad, that I wish myself back in Old England.
- You will say it is wrong, but I cannot help it: I almost
- Wish myself back in Old England, I feel so lonely and wretched."
 - Thereupon answered the youth: "Indeed I do not condemn you;
- Stouter hearts than a woman's have quailed in this terrible winter.
- Yours is tender and trusting, and needs a stronger to lean on;
- So I have come to you now, with an offer and proffer of marriage
- Made by a good man and true, Miles Standish the Captain of Plymouth!"
 - Thus he delivered his message, the dexterous writer of letters,—
- Did not embellish the theme, nor array it in beautiful phrases,
- But came straight to the point, and blurted it out like a school-boy;
- Even the Captain himself could hardly have said it more bluntly.
- Mute with amazement and sorrow, Priscilla the Puritan maiden
- Looked into Alden's face, her eyes dilated with wonder,
- Feeling his words like a blow, that stunned her and rendered her speechless;

- Till at length she exclaimed, interrupting the ominous silence:
- "If the great Captain of Plymouth is so very eager to wed me,
- Why does he not come himself, and take the trouble to woo me?
- If I am not worth the wooing, I surely am not worth the winning!"
- Then John Alden began explaining and smoothing the matter,
- Making it worse as he went, by saying the Captain was busy,—
- Had no time for such things; such things! the words grating harshly
- Fell on the ear of Priscilla; and swift as a flash she made answer:
- "Has he no time for such things, as you call it, before he is married,
- Would he be likely to find it, or make it, after the wedding?
- That is the way with you men; you don't understand us, you cannot.
- When you have made up your minds, after thinking of this one and that one,
- Choosing, selecting, rejecting, comparing one with another,
- Then you make known your desire, with abrupt and sudden avowal,
- And are offended and hurt, and indignant perhaps, that a woman
- Does not respond at once to a love that she never suspected,
- Does not attain at a bound the height to which you have been climbing.

- This is not right nor just; for surely a woman's af-
- Is not a thing to be asked for, and had for only the asking.
- When one is truly in love, one not only says it, but shows it.
- Had he but waited awhile, had he only showed that he loved me,
- Even this Captain of yours who knows? at last might have won me,
- Old and rough as he is; but now it never can happen."
 - Still John Alden went on, unheeding the words of Priscilla,
- Urging the suit of his friend, explaining, persuading, expanding;
- Spoke of his courage and skill, and of all his battles in Flanders,
- How with the people of God he had chosen to suffer affliction,
- How, in return for his zeal, they had made him Captain of Plymouth;
- He was a gentleman born, could trace his pedigree plainly
- Back to Hugh Standish of Duxbury Hall, in Lancashire, England,

321. "There are at this time in England two ancient families of the name, one of Standish Hall, and the other of Duxbury Park, both in Lancashire, who trace their descent from a common ancestor, Ralph de Standish, living in 1221. There seems always to have been a military spirit in the family. Froissart, relating in his Chronicles the memorable meeting between Richard II. and Wat Tyler, says that after the rebel was struck from

- Who was the son of Ralph, and the grandson of Thurston de Standish;
- Heir unto vast estates, of which he was basely defrauded,
- Still bore the family arms, and had for his crest a cock argent
- Combed and wattled gules, and all the rest of the blazon.
- He was a man of honor, of noble and generous nature;
- Though he was rough, he was kindly; she knew how during the winter
- He had attended the sick, with a hand as gentle as woman's;
- Somewhat hasty and hot, he could not deny it, and headstrong,
- Stern as a soldier might be, but hearty, and placable always,
- Not to be laughed at and scorned, because he was little of stature;
- For he was great of heart, magnanimous, courtly, courageous;
- Any woman in Plymouth, nay, any woman in England,

his horse by William Walworth, 'then a squyer of the kynges alyted, called John Standysshe, and he drewe out his sworde, and put into Wat Tyler's belye, and so he dyed.' For this act Standish was knighted. In 1415 another Sir John Standish fought at the battle of Agincourt. From his giving the name of Duxbury to the town where he settled, near Plymouth, and calling his eldest son Alexander (a common name in the Standish family), I have no doubt that Miles was a scion from this ancient and warlike stock." Young's Chronicles of the Pilgrims, footnote, p. 125.

325. Terms of heraldry. Argent is silver and gules red.

Might be happy and proud to be called the wife of Miles Standish!

But as he warmed and glowed, in his simple and eloquent language,

Quite forgetful of self, and full of the praise of his rival,

Archly the maiden smiled, and, with eyes overrunning with laughter,

Said, in a tremulous voice, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?"

IV.

JOHN ALDEN.

Into the open air John Alden, perplexed and bewildered,

Rushed like a man insane, and wandered alone by the sea-side;

Paced up and down the sands, and bared his head to the east-wind,

Cooling his heated brow, and the fire and fever within him.

Slowly, as out of the heavens, with apocalyptical splendors,

Sank the City of God, in the vision of John the Apostle,

So, with its cloudy walls of chrysolite, jasper, and sapphire,

Sank the broad red sun, and over its turrets uplifted Glimmered the golden reed of the angel who measured the city.

344. See the last chapter of the Book of Revelation.

- "Welcome, O wind of the East!" he exclaimed in his wild exultation,
- Welcome, O wind of the East, from the caves of the misty Atlantic!
- Blowing o'er fields of dulse, and measureless meadows of sea-grass, 350
- Blowing o'er rocky wastes, and the grottos and gardens of ocean!
- Lay thy cold, moist hand on my burning forehead, and wrap me
- Close in thy garments of mist, to allay the fever within me!"
 - Like an awakened conscience, the sea was moaning and tossing.
- Beating remorseful and loud the mutable sands of the sea-shore.

 355
- Fierce in his soul was the struggle and tumult of passions contending;
- Love triumphant and crowned, and friendship wounded and bleeding,
- Passionate cries of desire, and importunate pleadings of duty!
- "Is it my fault," he said, "that the maiden has chosen between us?
- Is it my fault that he failed, my fault that I am the victor?"
- Then within him there thundered a voice, like the voice of the Prophet:
- "It hath displeased the Lord!"—and he thought of David's transgression,
- Bathsheba's beautiful face, and his friend in the front of the battle!

- Shame and confusion of guilt, and abasement and selfcondemnation,
- Overwhelmed him at once; and he cried in the deepest contrition:
- "It hath displeased the Lord! It is the temptation of Satan!"
 - Then, uplifting his head, he looked at the sea, and beheld there
- Dimly the shadowy form of the Mayflower riding at anchor,
- Rocked on the rising tide, and ready to sail on the morrow;
- Heard the voices of men through the mist, the rattle of cordage
- Thrown on the deck, the shouts of the mate, and the sailors' "Ay, ay, Sir!"
- Clear and distinct, but not loud, in the dripping air of the twilight.
- Still for a moment he stood, and listened, and stared at the vessel,
- Then went hurriedly on, as one who, seeing a phantom,
- Stops, then quickens his pace, and follows the beckoning shadow.

- "Yes, it is plain to me now," he murmured; "the hand of the Lord is
- Leading me out of the land of darkness, the bondage of error,
- Through the sea, that shall lift the walls of its waters around me,
- Hiding me, cutting me off, from the cruel thoughts that pursue me.
- Back will I go o'er the ocean, this dreary land will abandon,

- Her whom I may not love, and him whom my heart has offended.
- Better to be in my grave in the green old churchyard in England,
- Close by my mother's side, and among the dust of my kindred;
- Better be dead and forgotten, than living in shame and dishonor!
- Sacred and safe and unseen, in the dark of the narrow chamber
- With me my secret shall lie, like a buried jewel that glimmers
- Bright on the hand that is dust, in the chambers of silence and darkness.—
- Yes, as the marriage ring of the great espousal hereafter!"
 - Thus as he spake, he turned, in the strength of his strong resolution,
- Leaving behind him the shore, and hurried along in the twilight,
- Through the congenial gloom of the forest silent and sombre,
- Till he beheld the lights in the seven houses of Plymouth,
- Shining like seven stars in the dusk and mist of the evening.
- Soon he entered his door, and found the redoubtable Captain

392. In a letter written by Edward Winslow, December 11, 1621, to a friend in England, he says: "You shall understand that in this little time that a few of us have been here, we have built seven dwelling-houses and four for the use of the plantation." Young's Chronicles, p. 230.

- Sitting alone, and absorbed in the martial pages of Cæsar,
- Fighting some great campaign in Hainault or Brabant or Flanders.
- "Long have you been on your errand," he said with a cheery demeanor,
- Even as one who is waiting an answer, and fears not the issue.
- "Not far off is the house, although the woods are between us;
- But you have lingered so long, that while you were going and coming
- I have fought ten battles and sacked and demolished a city.
- Come, sit down, and in order relate to me all that has happened."
 - Then John Alden spake, and related the wondrous adventure
- From beginning to end, minutely, just as it happened;
- How he had seen Priscilla, and how he had sped in his courtship,
- Only smoothing a little, and softening down her refusal.
- But when he came at length to the words Priscilla had spoken,
- Words so tender and cruel, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?"
- Up leaped the Captain of Plymouth, and stamped on the floor, till his armor
- Clanged on the wall, where it hung, with a sound of sinister omen.
- All his pent-up wrath burst forth in a sudden explosion,

- E'en as a hand-grenade, that scatters destruction around it.
- Wildly he shouted, and loud: "John Alden! you have betrayed me!
- Me, Miles Standish, your friend! have supplanted, defrauded, betrayed me!
- One of my ancestors ran his sword through the heart of Wat Tyler;
- Who shall prevent me from running my own through the heart of a traitor?
- Yours is the greater treason, for yours is a treason to friendship!
- You, who lived under my roof, whom I cherished and loved as a brother:
- You, who have fed at my board, and drunk at my cup, to whose keeping
- I have intrusted my honor, my thoughts the most sacred and secret. —
- You too, Brutus! ah, woe to the name of friendship hereafter!
- Brutus was Cæsar's friend, and you were mine, but henceforward
- Let there be nothing between us save war, and implacable hatred!"
 - So spake the Captain of Plymouth, and strode about in the chamber,
- Chafing and choking with rage; like cords were the veins on his temples.
- But in the midst of his anger a man appeared at the doorway,
- Bringing in uttermost haste a message of urgent importance.
- Rumors of danger and war and hostile incursions of Indians!

- Straightway the Captain paused, and, without further question or parley,
- Took from the nail on the wall his sword with its scabbard of iron,
- Buckled the belt round his waist, and, frowning fiercely, departed.
- Alden was left alone. He heard the clank of the scabbard
- Growing fainter and fainter, and dying away in the distance.
- Then he arose from his seat, and looked forth into the darkness,
- Felt the cool air blow on his cheek, that was hot with the insult,
- Lifted his eyes to the heavens, and, folding his hands as in childhood,
- Prayed in the silence of night to the Father who seeth in secret.
 - Meanwhile the choleric Captain strode wrathful away to the council,
- Found it already assembled, impatiently waiting his coming;
- Men in the middle of life, austere and grave in deportment,
- Only one of them old, the hill that was nearest to heaven,
- Covered with snow, but erect, the excellent Elder of Plymouth.
- 442. Elder William Brewster. The elder of the Pilgrim Church was the minister who taught and administered the sacraments. He was assisted also by an officer named the ruling elder, whose function was much the same as that of the deacon in Congregational churches at the present day. The teaching elder

God had sifted three kingdoms to find the wheat for this planting,

Then had sifted the wheat, as the living seed of a nation;

So say the chronicles old, and such is the faith of the people!

Near them was standing an Indian, in attitude stern and defiant,

Naked down to the waist, and grim and ferocious in aspect;

While on the table before them was lying unopened a Bible,

Ponderous, bound in leather, brass-studded, printed in Holland,

And beside it outstretched the skin of a rattlesnake glittered, included ruling among his duties; the ruling elder sometimes taught in the absence of his superior; the teaching elder was maintained by the people; the ruling elder was not withdrawn from other occupations, and maintained himself. Brewster was the ruling elder in the little Plymouth Church, but in the absence of Robinson was also their teacher.

450

443. In Stoughton's election sermon of 1668 occurs the first use, apparently, of this oft-quoted phrase: "God sifted a whole nation that he might send a choice grain over into this wilderness."

449. The Genevan Bible was the favorite version of the Puritans, and was clung to long after the King James version had been issued. Owing to obstacles in England, the Bible was frequently printed on the Continent, once at any rate at Amsterdam.

450. As a matter of history, the first recorded instance of the rattlesnake skin challenge was in January, 1622, when Tisquantum the Indian brought a defiance from Canonicus, and the governor returned the skin stuffed with bullets. Holmes, in his Annals (i. 177), reminds the reader: "There is a remarkable coincidence in the form of this challenge given by the Scythian

- Filled, like a quiver, with arrows: a signal and challenge of warfare,
- Brought by the Indian, and speaking with arrowy tongues of defiance.
- This Miles Standish beheld, as he entered, and heard them debating
- What were an answer befitting the hostile message and menace,
- Talking of this and of that, contriving, suggesting, objecting;

 455
- One voice only for peace, and that the voice of the Elder,
- Judging it wise and well that some at least were converted,
- Rather than any were slain, for this was but Christian behavior!
- Then out spake Miles Standish, the stalwart Captain of Plymouth,
- Muttering deep in his throat, for his voice was husky with anger,
- "What! do you mean to make war with milk and the water of roses?
- Is it to shoot red squirrels you have your howitzer planted
- There on the roof of the church, or is it to shoot red devils?
- Truly the only tongue that is understood by a savage
- prince to Darius. Five arrows made a part of the present sent by his herald to the Persian king. The manner of declaring war by the Aracaunian Indians of South America was by sending from town to town an arrow clinched in a dead man's hand."
- 457. The poet here has used the words of John Robinson to the colonists after the first encounter with the Indians: "Oh, how happy a thing had it been, if you had converted some before you had killed any!"

- Must be the tongue of fire that speaks from the mouth of the cannon!"
- Thereupon answered and said the excellent Elder of Plymouth,
- Somewhat amazed and alarmed at this irreverent language:
- "Not so thought Saint Paul, nor yet the other Apostles;
- Not from the cannon's mouth were the tongues of fire they spake with!"
- But unheeded fell this mild rebuke on the Captain, 470 Who had advanced to the table, and thus continued discoursing:
- "Leave this matter to me, for to me by right it per-
- War is a terrible trade; but in the cause that is righteous,
- Sweet is the smell of powder; and thus I answer the challenge!"
 - Then from the rattlesnake's skin, with a sudden, contemptuous gesture,
- Jerking the Indian arrows, he filled it with powder and bullets
- Full to the very jaws, and handed it back to the savage,
- Saying, in thundering tones: "Here, take it! this is your answer!"
- Silently out of the room then glided the glistening savage,
- Bearing the serpent's skin, and seeming himself like a serpent,

 480
- Winding his sinuous way in the dark to the depths of the forest.

V.

THE SAILING OF THE MAYFLOWER.

- Just in the gray of the dawn, as the mists uprose from the meadows,
- There was a stir and a sound in the slumbering village of Plymouth;
- Clanging and clicking of arms, and the order imperative, "Forward!"
- Given in tone suppressed, a tramp of feet, and then silence.
- Figures ten, in the mist, marched slowly out of the village.
- Standish the stalwart it was, with eight of his valorous army,
- Led by their Indian guide, by Hobomok, friend of the white men,
- Northward marching to quell the sudden revolt of the savage.
- Giants they seemed in the mist, or the mighty men of King David;
- Giants in heart they were, who believed in God and the Bible, —
- Ay, who believed in the smiting of Midianites and Philistines.
- Over them gleamed far off the crimson banners of morning;
- Under them loud on the sands, the serried billows, advancing,
- Fired along the line, and in regular order retreated. 495
 - Many a mile had they marched, when at length the village of Plymouth

- Woke from its sleep, and arose, intent on its manifold labors.
- Sweet was the air and soft; and slowly the smoke from the chimneys
- Rose over roofs of thatch, and pointed steadily eastward;
- Men came forth from the doors, and paused and talked of the weather,
- Said that the wind had changed, and was blowing fair for the Mayflower;
- Talked of their Captain's departure, and all the dangers that menaced,
- He being gone, the town, and what should be done in his absence.
- Merrily sang the birds, and the tender voices of women
- Consecrated with hymns the common cares of the household.
- Out of the sea rose the sun, and the billows rejoiced at his coming;
- Beautiful were his feet on the purple tops of the mountains:
- Beautiful on the sails of the Mayflower riding at anchor,
- Battered and blackened and worn by all the storms of the winter.
- Loosely against her masts was hanging and flapping her canvas,

 510
- Rent by so many gales, and patched by the hands of the sailors.
- Suddenly from her side, as the sun rose over the ocean,
- Darted a puff of smoke, and floated seaward; anon rang
- Loud over field and forest the cannon's roar, and the

Heard and repeated the sound, the signal-gun of departure!

Ah! but with louder echoes replied the hearts of the people!

Meekly, in voices subdued, the chapter was read from the Bible,

Meekly the prayer was begun, but ended in fervent entreaty!

Then from their houses in haste came forth the Pilgrims of Plymouth,

Men and women and children, all hurrying down to the sea-shore,

Eager, with tearful eyes, to say farewell to the Mayflower,

Homeward bound o'er the sea, and leaving them here in the desert.

Foremost among them was Alden. All night he had lain without slumber,

Turning and tossing about in the heat and unrest of his fever.

He had beheld Miles Standish, who came back late from the council, 525

Stalking into the room, and heard him mutter and murmur,

Sometimes it seemed a prayer, and sometimes it sounded like swearing.

Once he had come to the bed, and stood there a moment in silence;

Then he had turned away, and said: "I will not awake him;

Let him sleep on, it is best; for what is the use of more talking!"

Then he extinguished the light, and threw himself down on his pallet,

- Dressed as he was, and ready to start at the break of the morning, —
- Covered himself with the cloak he had worn in his campaigns in Flanders,—
- Slept as a soldier sleeps in his bivouac, ready for action.
- But with the dawn he arose; in the twilight Alden beheld him
- Put on his corselet of steel, and all the rest of his armor,
- Buckle about his waist his trusty blade of Damascus,
- Take from the corner his musket, and so stride out of the chamber.
- Often the heart of the youth had burned and yearned to embrace him,
- Often his lips had essayed to speak, imploring for pardon;
- All the old friendship came back with its tender and grateful emotions;
- But his pride overmastered the nobler nature within him, —
- Pride, and the sense of his wrong, and the burning fire of the insult.
- So he beheld his friend departing in anger, but spake not.
- Saw him go forth to danger, perhaps to death, and he spake not!
- Then he arose from his bed, and heard what the people were saying,
- Joined in the talk at the door, with Stephen and Richard and Gilbert,
- 547. The names are not taken at random. Stephen Hopkins, Richard Warren, and Gilbert Winslow were all among the May-flower passengers, and were alive at this time.

- Joined in the morning prayer, and in the reading of Scripture,
- And, with the others, in haste went hurrying down to the sea-shore.
- Down to the Plymouth Rock, that had been to their feet as a doorstep 550
- Into a world unknown, the corner-stone of a nation!
 - There with his boat was the Master, already a little impatient
- Lest he should lose the tide, or the wind might shift to the eastward,
- Square-built, hearty, and strong, with an odor of ocean about him,
- Speaking with this one and that, and cramming letters and parcels
- Into his pockets capacious, and messages mingled together
- Into his narrow brain, till at last he was wholly bewildered.
- Nearer the boat stood Alden, with one foot placed on the gunwale,
- One still firm on the rock, and talking at times with the sailors,
- Seated erect on the thwarts, all ready and eager for starting.

 560
- He too was eager to go, and thus put an end to his anguish,
- Thinking to fly from despair, that swifter than keel is or canvas,
- Thinking to drown in the sea the ghost that would rise and pursue him.
- But as he gazed on the crowd, he beheld the form of Priseilla

- Standing dejected among them, unconscious of all that was passing.

 565
- Fixed were her eyes upon his, as if she divined his intention,
- Fixed with a look so sad, so reproachful, imploring, and patient,
- That with a sudden revulsion his heart recoiled from its purpose,
- As from the verge of a crag, where one step more is destruction.
- Strange is the heart of man, with its quick, mysterious instincts!
- Strange is the life of man, and fatal or fated are moments,
- Whereupon turn, as on hinges, the gates of the wall adamantine!
- "Here I remain!" he exclaimed, as he looked at the heavens above him,
- Thanking the Lord whose breath had scattered the mist and the madness.
- Wherein, blind and lost, to death he was staggering headlong.

 575
- "Yonder snow-white cloud, that floats in the ether above me,
- Seems like a hand that is pointing and beckoning over the ocean.
- There is another hand, that is not so spectral and ghost-like,
- Holding me, drawing me back, and clasping mine for protection.
- Float, O hand of cloud, and vanish away in the ether!
- Roll thyself up like a fist, to threaten and daunt me;
 I heed not

Either your warning or menace, or any omen of evil! There is no land so sacred, no air so pure and so wholesome,

As is the air she breathes, and the soil that is pressed by her footsteps.

Here for her sake will I stay, and like an invisible presence 535

Hover around her forever, protecting, supporting her weakness;

Yes! as my foot was the first that stepped on this rock at the landing,

So, with the blessing of God, shall it be the last at the leaving!"

Meanwhile the Master alert, but with dignified air and important,

Scanning with watchful eye the tide and the wind and the weather,

Walked about on the sands, and the people crowded around him

Saying a few last words, and enforcing his careful remembrance.

Then, taking each by the hand, as if he were grasping a tiller,

Into the boat he sprang, and in haste shoved off to his vessel,

Glad in his heart to get rid of all this worry and flurry.

595

Glad to be gone from a land of sand and sickness and sorrow,

Short allowance of victual, and plenty of nothing but Gospel!

Lost in the sound of the oars was the last farewell of the Pilgrims.

- O strong hearts and true! not one went back in the Mayflower!
- No, not one looked back, who had set his hand to this ploughing!
 - Soon were heard on board the shouts and songs of the sailors
- Heaving the windlass round, and hoisting the ponderous anchor.
- Then the yards were braced, and all sails set to the west-wind.
- Blowing steady and strong; and the Mayflower sailed from the harbor,
- Rounded the point of the Gurnet, and leaving far to the southward
- Island and cape of sand, and the Field of the First Encounter,
- Took the wind on her quarter, and stood for the open Atlantic,
- Borne on the send of the sea, and the swelling hearts of the Pilgrims.
 - Long in silence they watched the receding sail of the vessel.
- 605. The Gurnet, or Gurnet's Nose, is a headland connecting with Marshfield by a beach about seven miles long. On its southern extremity are two light-houses which light the entrance to Plymouth Harbor.
- 606. "So after we had given God thanks for our deliverance, we took our shallop and went on our journey, and called this place The First Encounter." Bradford and Winslow's Journal in Young's Chronicles, p. 159. The place on the Eastham shore marked the spot where the Pilgrims had their first encounter with the Indians, December 8, 1620. A party under Miles Standish was exploring the country while the Mayflower was at anchor in Provincetown Harbor.

Much endeared to them all, as something living and human:

Then, as if filled with the spirit, and wrapt in a vision prophetic,

Baring his hoary head, the excellent Elder of Plymouth

Said, "Let us pray!" and they prayed, and thanked the Lord and took courage.

Mournfully sobbed the waves at the base of the rock, and above them

Bowed and whispered the wheat on the hill of death, and their kindred

Seemed to awake in their graves, and to join in the prayer that they uttered.

Sun-illumined and white, on the eastern verge of the ocean

Gleamed the departing sail, like a marble slab in a graveyard;

Buried beneath it lay forever all hope of escaping.

Lo! as they turned to depart, they saw the form of an Indian,

Watching them from the hill; but while they spake with each other,

Pointing with outstretched hands, and saying, "Look!" he had vanished.

So they returned to their homes; but Alden lingered a little,

Musing alone on the shore, and watching the wash of the billows

Round the base of the rock, and the sparkle and flash of the sunshine,

Like the spirit of God, moving visibly over the waters.

VI.

PRISCILLA.

- Thus for a while he stood, and mused by the shore of the ocean,
- Thinking of many things, and most of all of Priscilla;
- And as if thought had the power to draw to itself, like the loadstone,
- Whatsoever it touches, by subtile laws of its nature,
- Lo! as he turned to depart, Priscilla was standing beside him.
 - "Are you so much offended, you will not speak to me?" said she.
- "Am I so much to blame, that yesterday, when you were pleading
- Warmly the cause of another, my heart, impulsive and wayward,
- Pleaded your own, and spake out, forgetful perhaps of decorum?
- Certainly you can forgive me for speaking so frankly, for saving
- What I ought not to have said, yet now I can never unsay it;
- For there are moments in life, when the heart is so full of emotion,
- That if by chance it be shaken, or into its depths like a pebble
- Drops some careless word, it overflows, and its secret,

- Spilt on the ground like water, can never be gathered together.
- Yesterday I was shocked, when I heard you speak of Miles Standish,
- Praising his virtues, transforming his very defects into virtues,
- Praising his courage and strength, and even his fighting in Flanders,
- As if by fighting alone you could win the heart of a woman,
- Quite overlooking yourself and the rest, in exalting your hero.
- Therefore I spake as I did, by an irresistible impulse.
- You will forgive me, I hope, for the sake of the friendship between us,
- Which is too true and too sacred to be so easily broken!"
- Thereupon answered John Alden, the scholar, the friend of Miles Standish:
- "I was not angry with you, with myself alone I was angry,
- Seeing how badly I managed the matter I had in my keeping."
- "No!" interrupted the maiden, with answer prompt and decisive;
- "No; you were angry with me, for speaking so frankly and freely.
- It was wrong, I acknowledge; for it is the fate of a woman 655
- Long to be patient and silent, to wait like a ghost that is speechless,
- Till some questioning voice dissolves the spell of its silence.

Hence is the inner life of so many suffering women Sunless and silent and deep, like subterranean rivers Running through caverns of darkness, unheard, unseen, and unfruitful,

Chafing their channels of stone, with endless and profitless murmurs."

Thereupon answered John Alden, the young man, the lover of women:

"Heaven forbid it, Priscilla; and truly they seem to me always

More like the beautiful rivers that watered the garden of Eden,

More like the river Euphrates, through deserts of Havilah flowing, 665

Filling the land with delight, and memories sweet of the garden!"

"Ah, by these words, I can see," again interrupted the maiden.

"How very little you prize me, or care for what I am saying.

When from the depths of my heart, in pain and with secret misgiving,

Frankly I speak to you, asking for sympathy only and kindness,

Straightway you take up my words, that are plain and direct and in earnest,

Turn them away from their meaning, and answer with flattering phrases.

This is not right, is not just, is not true to the best that is in you;

659. Compare Coleridge, -

"Where Alph, the sacred river, ran Through caverns measureless to man, Down to a sunless sea."

- For I know and esteem you, and feel that your nature is noble,
- Lifting mine up to a higher, a more ethereal level. 675
 Therefore I value your friendship, and feel it perhaps the more keenly
- If you say aught that implies I am only as one among many,
- If you make use of those common and complimentary phrases
- Most men think so fine, in dealing and speaking with women,
- But which women reject as insipid, if not as insulting."
 - Mute and amazed was Alden; and listened and looked at Priscilla,
- Thinking he never had seen her more fair, more divine in her beauty.
- He who but yesterday pleaded so glibly the cause of another,
- Stood there embarrassed and silent, and seeking in vain for an answer.
- So the maiden went on, and little divined or imagined 685
- What was at work in his heart, that made him so awkward and speechless.
- "Let us, then, be what we are, and speak what we think, and in all things
- Keep ourselves loyal to truth, and the sacred professions of friendship.
- It is no secret I tell you, nor am I ashamed to declare it:
- I have liked to be with you, to see you, to speak with you always.

- So I was hurt at your words, and a little affronted to hear you
- Urge me to marry your friend, though he were the Captain Miles Standish.
- For I must tell you the truth: much more to me is your friendship
- Than all the love he could give, were he twice the hero you think him."
- Then she extended her hand, and Alden, who eagerly grasped it,
- Felt all the wounds in his heart, that were aching and bleeding so sorely,
- Healed by the touch of that hand, and he said, with a voice full of feeling:
- "Yes, we must ever be friends; and of all who offer you friendship
- Let me be ever the first, the truest, the nearest and dearest!"
 - Casting a farewell look at the glimmering sail of the Mayflower 700
- Distant, but still in sight, and sinking below the horizon,
- Homeward together they walked, with a strange, indefinite feeling,
- That all the rest had departed and left them alone in the desert.
- But, as they went through the fields in the blessing and smile of the sunshine.
- Lighter grew their hearts, and Priscilla said very archly:
- "Now that our terrible Captain has gone in pursuit of the Indians,
- Where he is happier far than he would be commanding a household,

- You may speak boldly, and tell me of all that happened between you,
- When you returned last night, and said how ungrateful you found me."
- Thereupon answered John Alden, and told her the whole of the story, —
- Told her his own despair, and the direful wrath of Miles Standish.
- Whereat the maiden smiled, and said between laughing and earnest,
- "He is a little chimney, and heated hot in a moment!"
- But as he gently rebuked her, and told her how he had suffered, —
- How he had even determined to sail that day in the Mayflower,
- And had remained for her sake, on hearing the dangers that threatened,—
- All her manner was changed, and she said with a faltering accent,
- "Truly I thank you for this: how good you have been to me always!"
 - Thus, as a pilgrim devout, who toward Jerusalem journeys,
- Taking three steps in advance, and one reluctantly backward,
- Urged by importunate zeal, and withheld by pangs of contrition;
- Slowly but steadily onward, receding yet ever advancing,
- Journeyed this Puritan youth to the Holy Land of his longings,
- Urged by the fervor of love, and withheld by remorseful misgivings.

VII.

THE MARCH OF MILES STANDISH.

- Meanwhile the stalwart Miles Standish was marching steadily northward, 725
- Winding through forest and swamp, and along the trend of the sea-shore,
- All day long, with hardly a halt, the fire of his anger Burning and crackling within, and the sulphurous odor of powder
- Seeming more sweet to his nostrils than all the scents of the forest.
- Silent and moody he went, and much he revolved his discomfort;
- He who was used to success, and to easy victories always,
- Thus to be flouted, rejected, and laughed to scorn by a maiden,
- Thus to be mocked and betrayed by the friend whom most he had trusted!
- Ah! 't was too much to be borne, and he fretted and chafed in his armor!
 - "I alone am to blame," he muttered, "for mine was the folly.
- What has a rough old soldier, grown grim and gray in the harness,
- Used to the camp and its ways, to do with the wooing of maidens?
- 'T was but a dream, let it pass, let it vanish like so many others!
- What I thought was a flower, is only a weed, and is worthless;

Out of my heart will I pluck it, and throw it away, and henceforward

Be but a fighter of battles, a lover and wooer of dangers."

Thus he revolved in his mind his sorry defeat and discomfort,

While he was marching by day or lying at night in the forest,

Looking up at the trees and the constellations beyond them.

After a three days' march he came to an Indian encampment 745

Pitched on the edge of a meadow, between the sea and the forest:

Women at work by the tents, and warriors, horrid with war-paint,

Seated about a fire, and smoking and talking together;

Who, when they saw from afar the sudden approach of the white men,

Saw the flash of the sun on breastplate and sabre and musket,

Straightway leaped to their feet, and two, from among them advancing,

Came to parley with Standish, and offer him furs as a present;

Friendship was in their looks, but in their hearts there was hatred.

745. The poet has taken his material for this expedition of Standish's from the report in Winslow's Relation of Standish's Expedition against the Indians of Weymouth, and the breaking up of Weston's Colony at that place, in March, 1623, as given in Dr. Young's Chronicles.

- Braves of the tribe were these, and brothers, gigantic in stature,
- Huge as Goliath of Gath, or the terrible Og, king of Bashan;
- One was Pecksuot named, and the other was called Wattawamat.
- Round their necks were suspended their knives in scabbards of wampum,
- Two-edged, trenchant knives, with points as sharp as a needle.
- Other arms had they none, for they were cunning and crafty.
- "Welcome, English!" they said, these words they had learned from the traders
- Touching at times on the coast, to barter and chaffer for peltries.
- Then in their native tongue they began to parley with Standish.
- Through his guide and interpreter, Hobomok, friend of the white man,
- Begging for blankets and knives, but mostly for muskets and powder,
- Kept by the white man, they said, concealed, with the plague, in his cellars,
- Ready to be let loose, and destroy his brother the red man!
- But when Standish refused, and said he would give them the Bible,
- Suddenly changing their tone, they began to boast and to bluster.
- Then Wattawamat advanced with a stride in front of the other.
- And, with a lofty demeanor, thus vauntingly spake to the Captain:

"Now Wattawamat can see, by the fiery eyes of the Captain,

Angry is he in his heart; but the heart of the brave Wattawamat

Is not afraid at the sight. He was not born of a woman,

But on a mountain, at night, from an oak-tree riven by lightning,

Forth he sprang at a bound, with all his weapons about him,

Shouting, 'Who is there here to fight with the brave Wattawamat?'"

Then he unsheathed his knife, and, whetting the blade on his left hand,

Held it aloft and displayed a woman's face on the handle,

Saying, with bitter expression and look of sinister meaning:

"I have another at home, with the face of a man on the handle;

By and by they shall marry; and there will be plenty of children!"

775. "Among the rest Wituwamat bragged of the excellency of his knife. On the end of the handle there was pictured a woman's face; 'but,' said he, 'I have another at home wherewith I have killed both French and English, and that hath a man's face on it, and by and by these two must marry.' Further he said of that knife he there had, Hinnaim namen, hinnaim michen, matta cuts; that is to say, By and by it should see, and by and by it should eat, but not speak. Also Pecksuot, being a man of greater stature than the captain, told him, though he were a great captain, yet he was but a little man; and, said he, though I be no sachem, yet I am a man of great strength and courage." Winslow's Relation. The poet turns the whole incident of Standish's parley and killing of the Indians into a more open and brave piece of conduct than the chronicle admits.

- Then stood Pecksuot forth, self-vaunting, insulting Miles Standish;
- While with his fingers he patted the knife that hung at his bosom,
- Drawing it half from its sheath, and plunging it back, as he muttered,
- "By and by it shall see; it shall eat; ah, ha! but shall speak not!
- This is the mighty Captain the white men have sent to destroy us!
- He is a little man; let him go and work with the women!"
 - Meanwhile Standish had noted the faces and figures of Indians
- Peeping and creeping about from bush to tree in the forest,
- Feigning to look for game, with arrows set on their bow-strings,
- Drawing about him still closer and closer the net of their ambush.
- But undaunted he stood, and dissembled and treated them smoothly;
- So the old chronicles say, that were writ in the days of the fathers.
- But when he heard their defiance, the boast, the taunt and the insult,
- All the hot blood of his race, of Sir Hugh and of Thurston de Standish, 795
- Boiled and beat in his heart, and swelled in the veins of his temples.
- Headlong he leaped on the boaster, and, snatching his knife from its scabbard,
- Plunged it into his heart, and, reeling backward, the savage

- Fell with his face to the sky, and a fiendlike fierceness upon it.
- Straight there arose from the forest the awful sound of the war-whoop,
- And, like a flurry of snow on the whistling wind of December,
- Swift and sudden and keen came a flight of feathery arrows.
- Then came a cloud of smoke, and out of the cloud came the lightning,
- Out of the lightning thunder; and death unseen ran before it.
- Frightened the savages fled for shelter in swamp and in thicket,
- Hotly pursued and beset; but their sachem, the brave Wattawamat,
- Fled not; he was dead. Unswerving and swift had a bullet
- Passed through his brain, and he fell with both hands clutching the greensward,
- Seeming in death to hold back from his foe the land of his fathers.
 - There on the flowers of the meadow the warriors lay, and above them,
- Silent, with folded arms, stood Hobomok, friend of the white man.
- 811. "Hobbamock stood by all this time as a spectator, and meddled not, observing how our men demeaned themselves in this action. All being here ended, smiling, he brake forth into these speeches to the Captain: 'Yesterday Pecksuot, bragging of his own strength and stature, said, though you were a great captain, yet you were but a little man; but to-day I see you are big enough to lay him on the ground.'" Winslow's Relation.

- Smiling at length he exclaimed to the stalwart Captain of Plymouth:
- "Pecksuot bragged very loud, of his courage, his strength and his stature,—
- Mocked the great Captain, and called him a little man; but I see now
- Big enough have you been to lay him speechless before you!"
 - Thus the first battle was fought and won by the stalwart Miles Standish.
- When the tidings thereof were brought to the village of Plymouth,
- And as a trophy of war the head of the brave Wattawamat
- Scowled from the roof of the fort, which at once was a church and a fortress,
- All who beheld it rejoiced, and praised the Lord, and took courage.

 820
- Only Priscilla averted her face from this spectre of terror.
- Thanking God in her heart that she had not married Miles Standish:
- Shrinking, fearing almost, lest, coming home from his battles,
- He should lay claim to her hand, as the prize and reward of his valor.
- 818. "Now was the Captain returned and received with joy, the head being brought to the fort, and there set up." Winslow's Relation. The custom of exposing the heads of offenders in this way was familiar enough to the Plymouth people before they left England. As late as the year 1747 the heads of the lords who were concerned in the Scot's Rebellion were set up over Temple Bar, in London.

VIII.

THE SPINNING WHEEL.

- Month after month passed away, and in autumn the ships of the merchants
- Came with kindred and friends, with cattle and corn for the Pilgrims.
- All in the village was peace; the men were intent on their labors,
- Busy with hewing and building, with garden-plot and with merestead,
- Busy with breaking the glebe, and mowing the grass in the meadows,
- Searching the sea for its fish, and hunting the deer in the forest.
- All in the village was peace; but at times the rumor of warfare
- Filled the air with alarm, and the apprehension of danger.
- Bravely the stalwart Standish was scouring the land with his forces,
- Waxing valiant in fight and defeating the alien armies,
- Till his name had become a sound of fear to the nations.
- 825. The poet again has moved the narrative forward, taking Standish's return from his expedition as the date from which after events are measured. The Anne and the Little James came at the beginning of August, 1623.
- 828. Mere or meare in Old English is boundary, and merestead becomes the bounded lot. The first entry in the records of Plymouth Colony is an incomplete list of "The Meersteads and Garden-plotes of those which came first, layed out, 1620."

- Anger was still in his heart, but at times the remorse and contrition
- Which in all noble natures succeed the passionate outbreak,
- Came like a rising tide, that encounters the rush of a river,
- Staying its current awhile, but making it bitter and brackish.
 - Meanwhile Alden at home had built him a new habitation,
- Solid, substantial, of timber rough-hewn from the firs of the forest.
- Wooden-barred was the door, and the roof was covered with rushes:
- Latticed the windows were, and the window-panes were of paper,
- Oiled to admit the light, while wind and rain were excluded.
- There too he dug a well, and around it planted an orchard:
- Still may be seen to this day some trace of the well and the orchard.
- 843. When the Fortune, which visited the colony in November, 1621, returned to England, Edward Winslow wrote by it a letter of advice to those who were thinking of emigrating to America, in which he says, "Bring paper and linseed oil for your windows." Glass windows were long considered a great luxury. When the Duke of Northumberland, in Elizabeth's time, left Alnwick Castle to come to London for the winter, the few glass windows which formed one of the luxuries of the castle were carefully taken out and laid away, perhaps carried to London to adorn the city residence.
 - 846. The Alden family still retain John Alden's homestead in Duxbury, and the present house is said to stand on the site of the one originally built there.

- Close to the house was the stall, where, safe and secure from annoyance,
- Raghorn, the snow-white bull, that had fallen to Alden's allotment
- In the division of cattle, might ruminate in the nighttime
- Over the pastures he cropped, made fragrant by sweet pennyroyal.
 - Oft when his labor was finished, with eager feet would the dreamer
- Follow the pathway that ran through the woods to the house of Priscilla,
- Led by illusions romantic and subtile deceptions of fancy,
- Pleasure disguised as duty, and love in the semblance of friendship.
- Ever of her he thought, when he fashioned the walls of his dwelling;
- Ever of her he thought, when he delved in the soil of his garden;
- Ever of her he thought, when he read in his Bible on Sunday
- Praise of the virtuous woman, as she is described in the Proverbs,—
- How the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her always,
- How all the days of her life she will do him good, and not evil,
- How she seeketh the wool and the flax and worketh with gladness,
- How she layeth her hand to the spindle and holdeth the distaff,

- How she is not afraid of the snow for herself or her household,
- Knowing her household are clothed with the scarlet cloth of her weaving!
 - So as she sat at her wheel one afternoon in the Autumn,
- Alden, who opposite sat, and was watching her dexterous fingers,
- As if the thread she was spinning were that of his life and his fortune,
- After a pause in their talk, thus spake to the sound of the spindle.
- "Truly, Priscilla," he said, "when I see you spinning and spinning,
- Never idle a moment, but thrifty and thoughtful of others,
- Suddenly you are transformed, are visibly changed in a moment;
- You are no longer Priscilla, but Bertha the Beautiful Spinner."
- Here the light foot on the treadle grew swifter and swifter; the spindle
- Uttered an angry snarl, and the thread snapped short in her fingers;
- While the impetuous speaker, not heeding the mischief, continued:
- "You are the beautiful Bertha, the spinner, the queen of Helvetia;
- She whose story I read at a stall in the streets of Southampton,
- 872. The legend of Bertha is given with various learning regarding it in a monograph entitled, Bertha die Spinnerin, by Karl Joseph Simrock, Frankfurt, 1853.

- Who, as she rode on her palfrey, o'er valley and meadow and mountain,
- Ever was spinning her thread from a distaff fixed to her saddle.
- She was so thrifty and good, that her name passed into a proverb.
- So shall it be with your own, when the spinning-wheel shall no longer
- Hum in the house of the farmer, and fill its chambers with music.
- Then shall the mothers, reproving, relate how it was in their childhood,
- Praising the good old times, and the days of Priscilla the spinner!"
- Straight uprose from her wheel the beautiful Puritan maiden, 885
- Pleased with the praise of her thrift from him whose praise was the sweetest,
- Drew from the reel on the table a snowy skein of her spinning,
- Thus making answer, meanwhile, to the flattering phrases of Alden:
- "Come, you must not be idle; if I am a pattern for housewives,
- Show yourself equally worthy of being the model of husbands.
- Hold this skein on your hands, while I wind it, ready for knitting;
- Then who knows but hereafter, when fashions have changed and the manners,
- Fathers may talk to their sons of the good old times of John Alden!"
- Thus, with a jest and a laugh, the skein on his hands she adjusted,

THE COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH. 163

- He sitting awkwardly there, with his arms extended before him,
- She standing graceful, erect, and winding the thread from his fingers,
- Sometimes chiding a little his clumsy manner of holding,
- Sometimes touching his hands, as she disentangled expertly
- Twist or knot in the yarn, unawares for how could she help it? —
- Sending electrical thrills through every nerve in his body.
 - Lo! in the midst of this scene, a breathless messenger entered,
- Bringing in hurry and heat the terrible news from the village.
- Yes; Miles Standish was dead!—an Indian had brought them the tidings,—
- Slain by a poisoned arrow, shot down in the front of the battle.
- Into an ambush beguiled, cut off with the whole of his forces;
- All the town would be burned, and all the people be murdered!
- Such were the tidings of evil that burst on the hearts of the hearers.
- Silent and statue-like stood Priscilla, her face looking backward
- Still at the face of the speaker, her arms uplifted in horror;
- But John Alden, upstarting, as if the barb of the arrow 910

164 HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

- Piercing the heart of his friend had struck his own, and had sundered
- Once and forever the bonds that held him bound as a captive,
- Wild with excess of sensation, the awful delight of his freedom,
- Mingled with pain and regret, unconscious of what he was doing,
- Clasped, almost with a groan, the motionless form of Priscilla,
- Pressing her close to his heart, as forever his own, and exclaiming:
- "Those whom the Lord hath united, let no man put them asunder!"
 - Even as rivulets twain, from distant and separate sources,
- Seeing each other afar, as they leap from the rocks, and pursuing
- Each one its devious path, but drawing nearer and nearer.
- Rush together at last, at their trysting-place in the forest;
- So these lives that had run thus far in separate channels,
- Coming in sight of each other, then swerving and flowing asunder,
- Parted by barriers strong, but drawing nearer and nearer,
- Rushed together at last, and one was lost in the other.

IX.

THE WEDDING-DAY.

- Forth from the curtain of clouds, from the tent of purple and scarlet,
- Issued the sun, the great High-Priest, in his garments resplendent,
- Holiness unto the Lord, in letters of light, on his fore-head,
- Round the hem of his robe the golden bells and pomegranates.
- Blessing the world he came, and the bars of vapor beneath him
- Gleamed like a grate of brass, and the sea at his feet was a laver!
 - This was the wedding morn of Priscilla the Puritan maiden.
- Friends were assembled together; the Elder and Magistrate also
- Graced the scene with their presence, and stood like the Law and the Gospel,
- One with the sanction of earth and one with the blessing of heaven.
- Simple and brief was the wedding, as that of Ruth and of Boaz.
- Softly the youth and the maiden repeated the words of betrothal,
- Taking each other for husband and wife in the Magistrate's presence,
- 927. For a description of the Jewish high-priest and his dress, see Exodus, chapter xxviii.

- After the Puritan way, and the laudable custom of Holland.
- Fervently then and devoutly, the excellent Elder of Plymouth
- Prayed for the hearth and the home, that were founded that day in affection,
- Speaking of life and of death, and imploring Divine benedictions.
 - Lo! when the service was ended, a form appeared on the threshold,
- Clad in armor of steel, a sombre and sorrowful figure!
- Why does the bridegroom start and stare at the strange apparition?
- Why does the bride turn pale, and hide her face on his shoulder?
- Is it a phantom of air,—a bodiless, spectral illusion?
- Is it a ghost from the grave, that has come to forbid the betrothal?
- Long had it stood there unseen, a guest uninvited, unwelcomed;
- Over its clouded eyes there had passed at times an expression 950
- Softening the gloom and revealing the warm heart hidden beneath them,
- 939. "May 12 was the first marriage in this place, which, according to the laudable custome of the Low-Cuntries, in which they had lived, was thought most requisite to be performed by the magistrate, as being a civill thing, upon which many questions aboute inheritances doe depende, with other things most proper to their cognizans, and most consonante to the scripturs, Ruth 4, and no wher found in the gospell to be layed on the ministers as a part of their office." Bradford's History, p. 101.

- As when across the sky the driving rack of the rain cloud
- Grows for a moment thin, and betrays the sun by its brightness.
- Once it had lifted its hand, and moved its lips, but was silent,
- As if an iron will had mastered the fleeting intention. 955
- But when were ended the troth and the prayer and the last benediction,
- Into the room it strode, and the people beheld with amazement
- Bodily there in his armor Miles Standish, the Captain of Plymouth!
- Grasping the bridegroom's hand, he said with emotion, "Forgive me!
- I have been angry and hurt,—too long have I cherished the feeling;
- I have been cruel and hard, but now, thank God! it is ended.
- Mine is the same hot blood that leaped in the veins of Hugh Standish,
- Sensitive, swift to resent, but as swift in atoning for error.
- 952. Rack, a Shaksperian word, used possibly in two senses, either as vapor, as in the thirty-third sonnet,—

"Anon permit the basest clouds to ride With ugly rack on his celestial face," which is plainly the meaning here, or as a light, cirrus cloud, as in the Tempest, Act IV. Scene 1:—

"And like this insubstantial pageant faded, Leave not a rack behind," although here, also, the meaning of vapor might be admissible. Bacon has defined rack: "The winds, which wave the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise."

- Never so much as now was Miles Standish the friend of John Alden."
- Thereupon answered the bridegroom: "Let all be forgotten between us,—
- All save the dear old friendship, and that shall grow older and dearer!"
- Then the Captain advanced, and, bowing, saluted Priscilla,
- Gravely, and after the manner of old-fashioned gentry in England,
- Something of camp and of court, of town and of country, commingled,
- Wishing her joy of her wedding, and loudly lauding her husband.
- Then he said with a smile: "I should have remembered the adage,—
- If you would be well served, you must serve yourself; and moreover,
- No man can gather cherries in Kent at the season of Christmas!"
 - Great was the people's amazement, and greater yet their rejoicing,
- Thus to behold once more the sunburnt face of their Captain, 975
- Whom they had mourned as dead; and they gathered and crowded about him,
- Eager to see him and hear him, forgetful of bride and of bridegroom,
- Questioning, answering, laughing, and each interrupting the other,
- Till the good Captain declared, being quite overpowered and bewildered,

- He had rather by far break into an Indian encampment, 980
- Than come again to a wedding to which he had not been invited.
 - Meanwhile the bridegroom went forth and stood with the bride at the doorway,
- Breathing the perfumed air of that warm and beautiful morning.
- Touched with autumnal tints, but lonely and sad in the sunshine,
- Lay extended before them the land of toil and privation;
- There were the graves of the dead, and the barren waste of the sea-shore,
- There the familiar fields, the groves of pine, and the meadows;
- But to their eyes transfigured, it seemed as the Garden of Eden.
- Filled with the presence of God, whose voice was the sound of the ocean.
 - Soon was their vision disturbed by the noise and stir of departure,
- Friends coming forth from the house, and impatient of longer delaying,
- Each with his plan for the day, and the work that was left uncompleted.
- Then from a stall near at hand, amid exclamations of wonder,
- Alden the thoughtful, the careful, so happy, so proud of Priscilla.
- Brought out his snow-white bull, obeying the hand of its master.

- Led by a cord that was tied to an iron ring in its nostrils.
- Covered with crimson cloth, and a cushion placed for a saddle.
- She should not walk, he said, through the dust and heat of the noonday;
- Nay, she should ride like a queen, not plod along like a peasant.
- Somewhat alarmed at first, but reassured by the others,
- Placing her hand on the cushion, her foot in the hand of her husband,
- Gayly, with joyous laugh, Priscilla mounted her palfrey.
- "Nothing is wanting now," he said with a smile, "but the distaff;
- Then you would be in truth my queen, my beautiful Bertha!"
 - Onward the bridal procession now moved to their new habitation,
- Happy husband and wife, and friends conversing together.
- Pleasantly murmured the brook, as they crossed the ford in the forest,
- Pleased with the image that passed, like a dream of love through its bosom,
- Tremulous, floating in air, o'er the depths of the azure abysses.
- Down through the golden leaves the sun was pouring his splendors,
- Gleaming on purple grapes, that, from branches above them suspended,
- Mingled their odorous breath with the balm of the pine and the fir-tree,

THE COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH. 171

- Wild and sweet as the clusters that grew in the valley of Eshcol.
- Like a picture it seemed of the primitive, pastoral ages,
- Fresh with the youth of the world, and recalling Rebecca and Isaac,
- Old and yet ever new, and simple and beautiful always,
- Love immortal and young in the endless succession of lovers.
- So through the Plymouth woods passed onward the bridal procession.

[Miles Standish was not inconsolable. In the Fortune came a certain Barbara, whose last name is unknown, whom Standish married. He had six children, and many of his descendants are living.]

THE BUILDING OF THE SHIP.

[THE form of this poem was perhaps suggested by Schiller's Song of the Bell, which, tracing the history of a bell from the first finding of the metal to the hanging of the bell in the tower, so mingles the history of human life with it that the Bell becomes the symbol of humanity. Schiller's poem introduced a new artistic form which has since been copied more than once, but nowhere so successfully as in The Building of the Ship. The changes in the measure mark the quickening or retarding of the thought. The reader will be interested in watching these changes and observing the fitness with which the short lines express the quicker, more sudden, or hurried action, while the longer ones indicate lingering, moderate action or reflection. The Building of the Ship is the first in a series of poems collected under the general title, By the Seaside, and published in a volume entitled, The Seaside and the Fireside, Boston, 1850.]

"Build me straight, O worthy Master!
Stanch and strong, a goodly vessel,
That shall laugh at all disaster,
And with wave and whirlwind wrestle!"

10

The merchant's word
Delighted the Master heard;
For his heart was in his work, and the heart
Giveth grace unto every Art.

A quiet smile played round his lips, As the eddies and dimples of the tide Play round the bows of ships, That steadily at anchor ride. And with a voice that was full of glee. He answered, "Ere long we will launch A vessel as goodly, and strong, and stanch, 15 As ever weathered a wintry sea!" And first with nicest skill and art. Perfect and finished in every part, A little model the Master wrought, Which should be to the larger plan 28 What the child is to the man, Its counterpart in miniature; That with a hand more swift and sure The greater labor might be brought To answer to his inward thought. And as he labored, his mind ran o'er The various ships that were built of yore, And above them all, and strangest of all, Towered the Great Harry, crank and tall,

The Great Harry was a famous ship built for the English navy in the reign of King Henry VII. Henry found the small navy left by Edward IV. in a very weak condition, and he undertook to reconstruct it. The most famous ship in Edward's navy was named Grace à Dieu and Henry named his Harry Grace à Dieu, but she was more generally known as the Great Harry. On the accession of Henry VIII. her name was changed to the Regent, but when a few years afterward she was burnt in an engagement with the French, the ship built in her place resumed the old name and became a second Great Harry. It was this ship that the poet describes. She was a thousand tons burden, which was regarded as an immense size in those days, and her crew and armanent were out of all proportion, as we should think now. She carried seven hundred men, and a hundred and twentytwo guns, but of these most were very small. Thirty-four were eighteen pounders, and were called culverins. There were also demi-culverins, or nine pounders, while the rest only carried one or two pounds and were variously named falcons, falconets, serpentines, sabinets.

Whose picture was hanging on the wall,
With bows and stern raised high in air,
And balconies hanging here and there,
And signal lanterns and flags afloat,
And eight round towers, like those that frown
From some old castle, looking down
Upon the drawbridge and the moat.
And he said with a smile, "Our ship, I wis,
Shall be of another form than this!"

It was of another form, indeed;
Built for freight, and yet for speed,
A beautiful and gallant craft;
Broad in the beam, that the stress of the blast,
Pressing down upon sail and mast,
Might not the sharp bows overwhelm;
Broad in the beam, but sloping aft
With graceful curve and slow degrees,
That she might be docile to the helm,
And that the currents of parted seas,
Closing behind, with mighty force,
Might aid and not impede her course.

In the ship-yard stood the Master,
With the model of the vessel,
That should laugh at all disaster,
And with wave and whirlwind wrestle!

Covering many a rood of ground,
Lay the timber piled around;
Timber of chestnut, and elm, and oak,
And scattered here and there, with these,
The knarred and crooked cedar knees;
Brought from regions far away,

From Pascagoula's sunny bay,
And the banks of the roaring Roanoke!
Ah! what a wondrous thing it is
To note how many wheels of toil
One thought, one word, can set in motion!
There's not a ship that sails the ocean,
But every climate, every soil,
Must bring its tribute, great or small,
And help to build the wooden wall!

The sun was rising o'er the sea,

And long the level shadows lay,
As if they, too, the beams would be
Of some great, airy argosy,
Framed and launched in a single day.
That silent architect, the sun,
Had hewn and laid them every one,

69. The wooden wall is of course the ship. The reference is to a proverbial expression of very ancient date. When the Greeks sent to Delphi to ask how they were to defend themselves against Xerxes, who had invaded their country, the oracle replied:—

"Pallas hath urged, and Zeus the sire of all Hath safety promised in a wooden wall; Seed-time and harvest, weeping sires shall tell How thousands fought at Salamis and fell."

The Greeks interpreted this as a caution to trust in their navy, and the battle at Salamis resulted in the overthrow of the Persians and discomfiture of their fleet.

73. A richly freighted ship. The word is formed from Argo, the name of the fabled ship which brought back the golden fleece from Colchis. Shakespeare uses the word: as in The Taming of the Shrew:—

"That she shall have; besides an argosy
That now is lying in Marseilles' road."

Act II. Scene 1.

And in The Merchant of Venice: -

"He hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies; I understand, moreover, upon the Rialto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England."

Act I. Scene 3.

Ere the work of man was yet begun.
Beside the Master, when he spoke,
A youth, against an anchor leaning,
Listened, to catch his slightest meaning.
Only the long waves, as they broke
In ripples on the pebbly beach,
Interrupted the old man's speech.

Beautiful they were, in sooth,
The old man and the fiery youth!
The old man, in whose busy brain
Many a ship that sailed the main
Was modelled o'er and o'er again;—
The fiery youth, who was to be
The heir of his dexterity,
The heir of his house, and his daughter's hand,
When he had built and launched from land
What the elder head had planned.
Thus," said he, "will we build this ship!

90

95

"Thus," said he, "will we build this ship!

Lay square the blocks upon the slip,

And follow well this plan of mine.

87. The main is the great ocean as distinguished from the bays, gulfs, and inlets. Curiously enough, it means also the main-land, and was used in both senses by Elizabethan writers. In King Lear, Act III. Scene 1:—

"Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main"—

some commentators take main to be the main-land, but a better sense seems to refer it to the open sea when a storm is raging. Yet the name of Spanish Main was given to the northern coast of South America when that country was taken possession of by Spain.

95. The slip is the inclined bank on which the ship is built. A similar meaning attaches to the use of the word locally in New York, where Peck Slip, Coenties Slip, Burling Slip, originally denoted the inclined openings between wharves.

Choose the timbers with greatest care;
Of all that is unsound beware;
For only what is sound and strong
To this vessel shall belong.
Cedar of Maine and Georgia pine
Here together shall combine.
A goodly frame, and a goodly fame,
And the Union be her name!
For the day that gives her to the sea
Shall give my daughter unto thee!"

The Master's word Enraptured the young man heard; And as he turned his face aside, With a look of joy and a thrill of pride, 110 Standing before Her father's door. He saw the form of his promised bride. The sun shone on her golden hair, And her cheek was glowing fresh and fair, 115 With the breath of morn and the soft sea air. Like a beauteous barge was she, Still at rest on the sandy beach, Just beyond the billow's reach; But he 120 Was the restless, seething, stormy sea!

Ah, how skilful grows the hand That obeyeth Love's command!

101. Here, as was noted in Schiller's Song of the Bell, the poet touches the ship with a special human interest, and, by his reference to Maine cedar and Georgia pine, half reveals the larger and wider sense of the building of the ship, which is disclosed at the end of the poem.

It is the heart, and not the brain, That to the highest doth attain, And he who followeth Love's behest Far excelleth all the rest!

Thus with the rising of the sun Was the noble task begun, And soon throughout the ship-yard's bounds Were heard the intermingled sounds Of axes and of mallets, plied With vigorous arms on every side; Plied so deftly and so well. That, ere the shadows of evening fell, The keel of oak for a noble ship, Scarfed and bolted, straight and strong, Was lying ready, and stretched along The blocks, well placed upon the slip. Happy, thrice happy, every one Who sees his labor well begun, And not perplexed and multiplied, By idly waiting for time and tide!

And when the hot, long day was o'er,
The young man at the Master's door
Sat with the maiden calm and still.
And within the porch, a little more
Removed beyond the evening chill,
The father sat, and told them tales
Of wrecks in the great September gales,
Of pirates coasting the Spanish Main,
And ships that never came back again,

151. See note to line 87. Here the Spanish Main is used, as was most anciently the custom, of the northern coast of South

The chance and change of a sailor's life, Want and plenty, rest and strife, His roving fancy, like the wind, 155 That nothing can stay and nothing can bind. And the magic charm of foreign lands, With shadows of palms, and shining sands, Where the tumbling surf, O'er the coral reefs of Madagascar, 160 Washes the feet of the swarthy Lascar, As he lies alone and asleep on the turf. And the trembling maiden held her breath At the tales of that awful, pitiless sea, With all its terror and mystery, 165 The dim, dark sea, so like unto Death, That divides and yet unites mankind! And whenever the old man paused, a gleam From the bowl of his pipe would awhile illume The silent group in the twilight gloom, 170 And thoughtful faces, as in a dream; And for a moment one might mark What had been hidden by the dark, That the head of the maiden lay at rest, Tenderly, on the young man's breast! 175

Day by day the vessel grew, With timbers fashioned strong and true,

America. This is probably also the sense in The Wreck of the Hesperus:—

"Then up and spake an old Sailor, Had sailed to the Spanish Main, "I pray thee put into yonder port, For I fear a hurricane."

153. "That among all the changes and chances of this mortal life, they may ever be defended by Thy most gracious and ready help." From a Collect in the Communion office, Book of Common Prayer.

Stemson and keelson and sternson-knee, Till, framed with perfect symmetry, A skeleton ship rose up to view! And around the bows and along the side The heavy hammers and mallets plied, Till after many a week, at length, Wonderful for form and strength, Sublime in its enormous bulk. Loomed aloft the shadowy hulk! And around it columns of smoke, upwreathing, Rose from the boiling, bubbling, seething Cauldron, that glowed, And overflowed With the black tar, heated for the sheathing. And amid the clamors Of clattering hammers. He who listened heard now and then The song of the Master and his men: -

"Build me straight, O worthy Master,
Stanch and strong, a goodly vessel,
That shall laugh at all disaster,
And with wave and whirlwind wrestle!"

With oaken brace and copper band,
Lay the rudder on the sand,
That, like a thought, should have control
Over the movement of the whole;
And near it the anchor, whose giant hand
Would reach down and grapple with the land,
And immovable and fast
Hold the great ship against the bellowing blast!
And at the bows an image stood,
By a cunning artist carved in wood,

With robes of white, that far behind 210 Seemed to be fluttering in the wind. It was not shaped in a classic mould. Not like a Nymph or Goddess of old. Or Naiad rising from the water. But modelled from the Master's daughter! 215 On many a dreary and misty night, 'T will be seen by the rays of the signal light. Speeding along through the rain and the dark, Like a ghost in its snow-white sark. The pilot of some phantom bark, 220 Guiding the vessel, in its flight, By a path none other knows aright! Behold, at last, Each tall and tapering mast Is swung into its place; 225

214. Strictly speaking, the Naiad was a nymph, the nymphs being the inferior order of deities that were supposed to reside in different parts of nature, naiads in the sea, dryads in trees, oreads in mountains.

215. Hawthorne has a charming story upon the romance of a figure-head in Drowne's Wooden Image, in Mosses from an Old Manse.

219. Sarks or shifts were made first of silk, whence the name, derived from the Latin sericum, silk.

225. Mr. Longfellow prints the following note to this and the two preceding lines: "I wish to anticipate a criticism on this passage by stating that sometimes, though not usually, vessels are launched fully rigged and sparred. I have availed myself of the exception, as better suited to my purposes than the general rule; but the reader will see that it is neither a blunder nor a poetic license. On this subject a friend in Portland, Maine, writes me thus: 'In this State, and also, I am told, in New York, ships are sometimes rigged upon the stocks, in order to save time, or to make a show. There was a fine, large ship launched last summer at Ellsworth, fully rigged and sparred. Some years ago a ship was launched here, with her rigging,

Long ago, In the deer-haunted forests of Maine, When upon mountain and plain 236 Lay the snow. They fell, - those lordly pines! Those grand, majestic pines! 'Mid shouts and cheers The jaded steers, 235 Panting beneath the goad, Dragged down the weary, winding road Those captive kings so straight and tall, To be shorn of their streaming hair, And, naked and bare, 240 To feel the stress and the strain Of the wind and the reeling main, Whose roar Would remind them forevermore Of their native forests they should not see again. 245

Stretched out from his native land, Filling his heart with memories sweet and endless!

All is finished! and at length
Has come the bridal day
Of beauty and of strength.
To-day the vessel shall be launched!
With fleecy clouds the sky is blanched,
And o'er the bay,
Slowly, in all his splendors dight,
The great sun rises to behold the sight.

The ocean old, Centuries old. Strong as youth, and as uncontrolled. Paces restless to and fro, Up and down the sands of gold. 270 His beating heart is not at rest; And far and wide. With ceaseless flow. His beard of snow Heaves with the heaving of his breast. 275 He waits impatient for his bride. There she stands. With her foot upon the sands, Decked with flags and streamers gay, In honor of her marriage day, 280 Her snow-white signals fluttering, blending, Round her like a veil descending, Ready to be The bride of the gray old sea.

266. This and the next eighteen lines illustrate well the skill with which the poet changes the length of the lines to denote an impatient, abrupt, and as it were short breathing movement.

On the deck another bride
Is standing by her lover's side.
Shadows from the flags and shrouds,
Like the shadows cast by clouds,
Broken by many a sunny fleck,
Fall around them on the deck.

The prayer is said, The service read. The joyous bridegroom bows his head; And in tears the good old Master Shakes the brown hand of his son, Kisses his daughter's glowing cheek In silence, for he cannot speak, And ever faster Down his own the tears begin to run. The worthy pastor — The shepherd of that wandering flock, That has the ocean for its wold. That has the vessel for its fold. Leaping ever from rock to rock -Spake, with accents mild and clear, Words of warning, words of cheer, But tedious to the bridegroom's ear. He knew the chart Of the sailor's heart, All its pleasures and its griefs, All its shallows and rocky reefs, All those secret currents, that flow With such resistless undertow, And lift and drift, with terrible force, The will from its moorings and its course. Therefore he spake, and thus said he: --Like unto ships far off at sea.

Outward or homeward bound, are we. Before, behind, and all around, Floats and swings the horizon's bound. 320 Seems at its distant rim to rise And climb the crystal wall of the skies, And then again to turn and sink, As if we could slide from its outer brink. Ah! it is not the sea. 325 It is not the sea that sinks and shelves. But ourselves That rock and rise With endless and uneasy motion, Now touching the very skies, 220 Now sinking into the depths of ocean. Ah! if our souls but poise and swing Like the compass in its brazen ring. Ever level and ever true To the toil and the task we have to do. 335 We shall sail securely, and safely reach The Fortunate Isles, on whose shining beach The sights we see, and the sounds we hear, Will be those of joy and not of fear!"

Then the Master,
With a gesture of command,
Waved his hand;
And at the word,
Loud and sudden there was heard,
All around them and below,
The sound of hammers, blow on blow,

337. The Fortunate Isles, or Isles of the Blest, were imaginary islands in the West, in classic mythology, set in a sea which was warmed by the rays of the declining sun. Thither the favorites of the gods were borne, to dwell in endless joy.

Knocking away the shores and spurs.

And see! she stirs!

She starts, — she moves, — she seems to feel

The thrill of life along her keel,

And, spurning with her foot the ground,

With one exulting, joyous bound,

She leaps into the ocean's arms!

355

360

365

375

And lo! from the assembled crowd
There rose a shout, prolonged and loud,
That to the ocean seemed to say,
"Take her, O bridegroom, old and gray,
Take her to thy protecting arms,
With all her youth and all her charms!"

How beautiful she is! How fair
She lies within those arms, that press
Her form with many a soft caress
Of tenderness and watchful care!
Sail forth into the sea, O ship!
Through wind and wave, right onward steer!
The moistened eye, the trembling lip,
Are not the signs of doubt or fear.

Sail forth into the sea of life,
O gentle, loving, trusting wife,
And safe from all adversity
Upon the bosom of that sea
Thy comings and thy goings be!
For gentleness and love and trust
Prevail o'er angry wave and gust;
And in the wreck of noble lives
Something immortal still survives!

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State! Sail on, O Union, strong and great! Humanity with all its fears. With all the hopes of future years. 380 Is hanging breathless on thy fate! We know what Master laid thy keel. What Workman wrought thy ribs of steel. Who made each mast, and sail, and rope, What anvils rang, what hammers beat, 385 In what a forge and what a heat Were shaped the anchors of thy hope! Fear not each sudden sound and shock. 'T is of the wave and not the rock: 'T is but the flapping of the sail, 390 And not a rent made by the gale! In spite of rock and tempest's roar, In spite of false lights on the shore, Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea! Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee, 395 Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears, Our faith triumphant o'er our fears, Are all with thee, - are all with thee!

393. The reference is to the treacherous display, by wreckers, of lights upon a dangerous coast, to attract vessels in a storm, that they may be wrecked and become the spoil of the thieves.

398. The closing lines gather into strong verses, like a choral, the cumulative meaning of the poem, which builds upon the material structure of the ship, the fancy of the bridal of sea and ship, the domestic life of man and the national life.

[Mr. Noah Brooks, in his paper on Lincoln's Imagination (Scribner's Monthly, August, 1879), mentions that he found the President one day attracted by these closing stanzas, which were quoted in a political speech: "Knowing the whole poem," he adds, "as one of my early exercises in recitation, I began, at his request, with the description of the launch of the ship, and repeated it to the end. As he listened to the last lines [395-398], his eyes filled with tears, and his cheeks were wet. He did not speak for some minutes, but finally said, with simplicity: 'It is a wonderful gift to be able to stir men like that.'"]

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER, of Quaker birth in Puritan surroundings, was born at the homestead near Haverhill, Massachusetts, December 17, 1807. Until his eighteenth year he lived at home, working upon the farm and in the little shoemaker's shop which nearly every farm then had as a resource in the otherwise idle hours of winter. The manual, homely labor upon which he was employed was in part the foundation of that deep interest which the poet never has ceased to take in the toil and plain fortunes of the people. Throughout his poetry runs this golden thread of sympathy with honorable labor and enforced poverty, and many poems are directly inspired by it. While at work with his father he sent poems to the Haverhill Gazette, and that he was not in subjection to his work is very evident by the fact that he translated it and similar occupations into Songs of Labor. He had two years' academic training, and in 1829 became editor in Boston of the American Manufacturer, a paper published in the interest of the tariff. In 1831 he published his Legends of New England, prose sketches in a department of literature which has always had strong claims upon his interest. No American writer, unless Irving be excepted, has done so much to throw a graceful veil of poetry and legend over the country of his daily life. Essex County, in Massachusetts, and the beaches iving between Newburyport and Portsmouth blossom with flowers of Whittier's planting. He has made rare use of the homely stories which he had heard in his childhood, and learned afterward from familiar intercourse with country people, and he has himself used invention delicately and in harmony with the spirit of the New England coast. Although of a body of men who in earlier days had been persecuted by the Puritans of New England, his generous mind has not failed to detect all the good that was in the stern creed and life of the persecutors, and to bring it forward into the light of his poetry.

In 1836 he published Mogg Megone, a poem which stood first in the collected edition of his poems issued in 1857, and was admitted there with some reluctance by the author, who placed it in an appendix when he made his final Riverside edition in 1888. In that and the Bridal of Pennacook he draws his material from the relation held between the Indians and the settlers. His sympathy was always with the persecuted and oppressed, and while historically he found an object of pity and self-reproach in the Indian, his profoundest compassion and most stirring indignation were called out by African slavery. From the earliest he was upon the side of the abolition party. Year after year poems fell from his pen in which with all the eloquence of his nature he sought to enlist his countrymen upon the side of emancipation and freedom. It is not too much to say that in the slow development of public sentiment Whittier's steady song was one of the most powerful advocates that the slave had, all the more powerful that it was free from malignity or unjust accusation.

Whittier's poems have been issued in a number of small volumes, and collected into single larger volumes. Besides those already indicated, there are a number which owe their origin to his tender regard for domestic life and the simple experience of the men and women about him. Of these Snow-Bound is the most memorable. Then his fondness for a story has led him to use the ballad form in many cases, and Mabel Martin is one of a number, in which the narrative is blended with a fine and strong charity. The catholic mind of this writer and his instinct for discovering the pure moral in human action are disclosed by a number of poems, drawn from a wide range of historical fact, dealing with a great variety of religious faiths and circumstances of life, but always pointing to some sweet and strong truth of the divine life. Of such are The Brother of Mercy, The Gift of Tritemius, The Two Rabbis, and others. Whittier's Prose Works are comprised in three volumes, and consist mainly of his contributions to journals and of Leaves from Margaret Smith's Journal, a fictitious diary of a visitor to New England in 1678. His complete works are published in seven volumes, four devoted to poetry and three to prose. A convenient edition of the complete poetical works is the Cambridge Edition in one volume.

Whittier died at Hampton Falls, New Hampshire, in the heart of the country of which he had sung, September 7, 1892, in the eighty-fifth year of his age.

SNOW-BOUND.

A WINTER IDYL.

"As the Spirits of Darkness be stronger in the dark, so good Spirits which be Angels of Light are augmented not only by the Divine light of the Sun, but also by our common VVood fire: and as the Celestial Fire drives away dark spirits, so also this our Fire of VVood doth the same." — COR. AGRIPPA, Occult Philosophy, Book I. ch. v.

"Announced by all the trumpets of the sky,
Arrives the enow; and, driving o'er the fields,
Seems nowhere to alight; the whited air
Hides hills and woods, the river and the heaven,
And veils the farm-house at the garden's end.
The sled and traveller stopped, the courier's feet
Delayed, all friends shut out, the housemates sit
Around the radiant fireplace, inclosed
In a tumultuous privacy of storm."

EMERSON, The Snow-Storm.

THE sun that brief December day
Rose cheerless over hills of gray,
And, darkly circled, gave at noon
A sadder light than waning moon.
Slow tracing down the thickening sky
Its mute and ominous prophecy,
A portent seeming less than threat,
It sank from sight before it set.
A chill no coat, however stout,
Of homespun stuff could quite shut out,

30

35

40

A hard, dull bitterness of cold,

That checked, mid-vein, the circling race
Of life-blood in the sharpened face,
The coming of the snow-storm told.
The wind blew east; we heard the roar
Of Ocean on his wintry shore,
And felt the strong pulse throbbing there
Beat with low rhythm our inland air.

Meanwhile we did our nightly chores, -Brought in the wood from out of doors, Littered the stalls, and from the mows Raked down the herd's-grass for the cows: Heard the horse whinnying for his corn; And, sharply clashing horn on horn, Impatient down the stanchion rows The cattle shake their walnut bows: While, peering from his early perch Upon the scaffold's pole of birch, The cock his crested helmet bent And down his querulous challenge sent. Unwarmed by any sunset light The gray day darkened into night, A night made hoary with the swarm And whirl-dance of the blinding storm, As zigzag wavering to and fro Crossed and recrossed the wingéd snow: And ere the early bedtime came The white drift piled the window-frame, And through the glass the clothes-line posts Looked in like tall and sheeted ghosts.

So all night long the storm roared on: The morning broke without a sun; In tiny spherule traced with lines Of Nature's geometric signs, In starry flake and pellicle All day the hoary meteor fell; And, when the second morning shone, We looked upon a world unknown, On nothing we could call our own. Around the glistening wonder bent 50 The blue walls of the firmament, No cloud above, no earth below, -A universe of sky and snow! The old familiar sights of ours Took marvellous shapes; strange domes and towers Rose up where sty or corn-crib stood, 56 Or garden-wall, or belt of wood: A smooth white mound the brush-pile showed, A fenceless drift what once was road; The bridle-post an old man sat 60 With loose-flung coat and high cocked hat; The well-curb had a Chinese roof: And even the long sweep, high aloof, In its slant splendor, seemed to tell Of Pisa's leaning miracle. 65

A prompt, decisive man, no breath Our father wasted: "Boys, a path!"

65. The Leaning Tower of Pisa, in Italy, which inclines from the perpendicular a little more than six feet in eighty, is a campanile, or bell-tower, built of white marble, very beautiful, but so famous for its singular deflection from perpendicularity as to be known almost wholly as a curiosity. Opinions differ as to the leaning being the result of accident or design, but the better judgment makes it an effect of the character of the soil on which it is built. The Cathedral to which it belongs has suffered so much from a similar cause that there is not a vertical line in it.

Well pleased, (for when did farmer boy Count such a summons less than joy?) Our buskins on our feet we drew: 70 With mittened hands, and caps drawn low To guard our necks and ears from snow, We cut the solid whiteness through. And, where the drift was deepest, made A tunnel walled and overlaid 75 With dazzling crystal: we had read Of rare Aladdin's wondrous cave, And to our own his name we gave, With many a wish the luck were ours To test his lamp's supernal powers. 88 We reached the barn with merry din. And roused the prisoned brutes within. The old horse thrust his long head out, And grave with wonder gazed about; The cock his lusty greeting said, 85 And forth his speckled harem led; The oxen lashed their tails, and hooked. And mild reproach of hunger looked; The hornéd patriarch of the sheep, Like Egypt's Amun roused from sleep, Shook his sage head with gesture mute, And emphasized with stamp of foot.

All day the gusty north-wind bore
The loosening drift its breath before;
Low circling round its southern zone,
The sun through dazzling snow-mist shone.
No church-bell lent its Christian tone

^{90.} Amun, or Ammon, was an Egyptian being, representing an attribute of Deity under the form of a ram.

To the savage air, no social smoke Curled over woods of snow-hung oak. A solitude made more intense 100 By dreary-voicéd elements, The shrieking of the mindless wind, The moaning tree-boughs swaying blind, And on the glass the unmeaning beat Of ghostly finger-tips of sleet. :105 Beyond the circle of our hearth No welcome sound of toil or mirth Unbound the spell, and testified Of human life and thought outside. We minded that the sharpest ear 110 The buried brooklet could not hear, The music of whose liquid lip Had been to us companionship, And, in our lonely life, had grown To have an almost human tone, 118

As night drew on, and, from the crest Of wooded knolls that ridged the west, The sun, a snow-blown traveller, sank From sight beneath the smothering bank, We piled with care our nightly stack Of wood against the chimney-back,—The oaken log, green, huge, and thick, And on its top the stout back-stick; The knotty forestick laid apart, And filled between with curious art The ragged brush; then, hovering near, We watched the first red blaze appear, Heard the sharp crackle, caught the gleam On whitewashed wall and sagging beam, Until the old, rude-furnished room

Burst, flower-like, into rosy bloom;
While radiant with a mimic flame
Outside the sparkling drift became,
And through the bare-boughed lilac-tree
Our own warm hearth seemed blazing free.
The crane and pendent trammels showed,
The Turk's heads on the andirons glowed;
While childish fancy, prompt to tell
The meaning of the miracle,
Whispered the old rhyme: "Under the tree
When fire outdoors burns merrily,
There the witches are making tea."

The moon above the eastern wood
Shone at its full; the hill-range stood
Transfigured in the silver flood,
Its blown snows flashing cold and keen,
Dead white, save where some sharp ravine
Took shadow, or the sombre green
Of hemlocks turned to pitchy black
Against the whiteness at their back.
For such a world and such a night
Most fitting that unwarming light,
Which only seemed where'er it fell
To make the coldness visible.

Shut in from all the world without,
We sat the clean-winged hearth about,
Content to let the north-wind roar
In baffled rage at pane and door,
While the red logs before us beat
The frost-line back with tropic heat;
And ever, when a louder blast
Shook beam and rafter as it passed,

The merrier up its roaring draught The great throat of the chimney laughed, The house-dog on his paws outspread Laid to the fire his drowsy head, The cat's dark silhouette on the wall A couchant tiger's seemed to fall: And, for the winter fireside meet, Between the andirons' straddling feet, The mug of cider simmered slow, The apples sputtered in a row, And, close at hand, the basket stood With nuts from brown October's wood.

What matter how the night behaved? What matter how the north-wind raved? Blow high, blow low, not all its snow Could quench our hearth-fire's ruddy glow. O Time and Change! — with hair as gray As was my sire's that winter day, How strange it seems, with so much gone Of life and love, to still live on! Ah, brother! only I and thou Are left of all that circle now, -The dear home faces whereupon That fitful firelight paled and shone. Henceforward, listen as we will, The voices of that hearth are still: Look where we may, the wide earth o'er, Those lighted faces smile no more. We tread the paths their feet have worn. We sit beneath their orchard trees. We hear, like them, the hum of bees

And rustle of the bladed corn: We turn the pages that they read,

Their written words we linger o'er. But in the sun they cast no shade. No voice is heard, no sign is made, No step is on the conscious floor! Yet Love will dream and Faith will trust 200 (Since He who knows our need is just) That somehow, somewhere, meet we must. Alas for him who never sees The stars shine through his cypress-trees! Who, hopeless, lays his dead away, 205 Nor looks to see the breaking day Across the mournful marbles play! Who hath not learned, in hours of faith. The truth to flesh and sense unknown. That Life is ever lord of Death. 210 And Love can never lose its own!

We sped the time with stories old,
Wrought puzzles out, and riddles told,
Or stammered from our school-book lore
"The chief of Gambia's golden shore."
How often since, when all the land
Was clay in Slavery's shaping hand,
As if a far-blown trumpet stirred
The languorous sin-sick air, I heard:
"Does not the voice of reason cry,
Claim the first right which Nature gave,
From the red scourge of bondage fly,
Nor deign to live a burdened slave!"
Our father rode again his ride

215. The first line of one of the stanzas in a poem entitled The African Chief, written by Mrs. Sarah Wentworth Morton, wife of a former attorney-general of Massachusetts. The schoolbook in which it was printed was Caleb Bingham's The American Preceptor.

On Memphremagog's wooded side;	223
Sat down again to moose and samp
In trapper's hut and Indian camp;
Lived o'er the old idyllic ease
Beneath St. François' hemlock-trees;
Again for him the moonlight shone	230
On Norman cap and bodiced zone;
Again he heard the violin play
Which led the village dance away,
And mingled in its merry whirl
The grandam and the laughing girl.	235
Or, nearer home, our steps he led
Where Salisbury's level marshes spread
Mile-wide as flies the laden bee;
Where merry mowers, hale and strong,
Swept, scythe on scythe, their swaths along	240
The low green prairies of the sea.
We shared the fishing off Boar's Head,
And round the rocky Isles of Shoals
The hake-broil on the driftwood coals;
The chowder on the sand-beach made,	24
Dipped by the hungry, steaming hot,
With spoons of clam-shell from the pot.
We heard the tales of witchcraft old,
And dream and sign and marvel told
To sleepy listeners as they lay	25
Stretched idly on the salted hay,
Adrift along the winding shores,
When favoring breezes deigned to blow
The square sail of the gundelow,
And idle lay the useless oars.	25

Our mother, while she turned her wheel Or run the new-knit stocking heel,

Told how the Indian hordes came down At midnight on Cochecho town. And how her own great-uncle bore 260 His cruel scalp-mark to fourscore. Recalling, in her fitting phrase, So rich and picturesque and free (The common unrhymed poetry Of simple life and country ways), 265 The story of her early days, -She made us welcome to her home: Old hearths grew wide to give us room; We stole with her a frightened look At the gray wizard's conjuring-book. 270 The fame whereof went far and wide Through all the simple country-side; We heard the hawks at twilight play, The boat-horn on Piscataqua, The loon's weird laughter far away: 275 We fished her little trout-brook, knew What flowers in wood and meadow grew, What sunny hillsides autumn-brown She climbed to shake the ripe nuts down, Saw where in sheltered cove and bay 280 The duck's black squadron anchored lay, And heard the wild geese calling loud Beneath the gray November cloud. Then, haply, with a look more grave, And soberer tone, some tale she gave 285 From painful Sewel's ancient tome, 259. Dover in New Hampshire.

^{286.} William Sewel was the historian of the Quakers. Charles Lamb seemed to have as good an opinion of the book as Whittier. In his essay A Quakers' Meeting, in Essays of Elia, he says: "Reader, if you are not acquainted with it, I would recommend

Beloved in every Quaker home,
Of faith fire-winged by martyrdom,
Or Chalkley's Journal, old and quaint,— Gentlest of skippers, rare sea-saint!—
Who, when the dreary calms prevailed,
And water-butt and bread-cask failed,
And cruel, hungry eyes pursued
His portly presence, mad for food,
With dark hints muttered under breath
Of casting lots for life or death,

to you, above all church-narratives, to read Sewel's History of the Quakers. . . . It is far more edifying and affecting than anything you will read of Wesley or his colleagues."

289. Thomas Chalkley was an Englishman of Quaker parentage, born in 1675, who travelled extensively as a preacher, and finally made his home in Philadelphia. He died in 1749; his Journal was first published in 1747. His own narrative of the incident which the poet relates is as follows: "To stop their murmuring, I told them they should not need to cast lots, which was usual in such cases, which of us should die first, for I would freely offer up my life to do them good. One said, 'God bless you! I will not eat any of you.' Another said, 'He would rather die before he would eat any of me; 'and so said several. I can truly say, on that occasion, at that time, my life was not dear to me, and that I was serious and ingenuous in my proposition: and as I was leaning over the side of the vessel, thoughtfully considering my proposal to the company, and looking in my mind to Him that made me, a very large dolphin came up towards the top or surface of the water, and looked me in the face; and I called the people to put a hook into the sea, and take him, for here is one come to redeem me (I said to them). And they put a hook into the sea, and the fish readily took it, and they caught him. He was longer than myself. I think he was about six feet long, and the largest that ever I saw. This plainly showed us that we ought not to distrust the providence of the Almighty. The people were quieted by this act of Providence, and murmured no more. We caught enough to eat plentifully of, till we got into the capes of Delaware."

Offered, if Heaven withheld supplies,
To be himself the sacrifice.
Then, suddenly, as if to save
The good man from his living grave,
A ripple on the water grew,
A school of porpoise flashed in view.
"Take, eat," he said, "and be content;
These fishes in my stead are sent
By Him who gave the tangled ram
To spare the child of Abraham."

Our uncle, innocent of books, Was rich in lore of fields and brooks. The ancient teachers never dumb Of Nature's unhoused lyceum. 210 In moons and tides and weather wise. He read the clouds as prophecies, And foul or fair could well divine, By many an occult hint and sign, Holding the cunning-warded keys 315 To all the woodcraft mysteries: Himself to Nature's heart so near That all her voices in his ear Of beast or bird had meanings clear, Like Apollonius of old, 320 Who knew the tales the sparrows told, Or Hermes, who interpreted

310. The measure requires the accent ly'ceum, but in stricter use the accent is lyce'um.

320. A philosopher born in the first century of the Christian era, of whom many strange stories were told, especially regarding his converse with birds and animals.

322. Hermes Trismegistus, a celebrated Egyptian priest and philosopher, to whom was attributed the revival of geometry, arithmetic, and art among the Egyptians. He was little later than Apollonius.

What the sage cranes of Nilus said; Content to live where life began; A simple, guileless, childlike man, Strong only on his native grounds, The little world of sights and sounds Whose girdle was the parish bounds, Whereof his fondly partial pride The common features magnified, 330 As Surrey hills to mountains grew In White of Selborne's loving view, -He told how teal and loon he shot, And how the eagle's eggs he got, The feats on pond and river done, 835 The prodigies of rod and gun; Till, warming with the tales he told, Forgotten was the outside cold, The bitter wind unheeded blew. From ripening corn the pigeons flew, 340 The partridge drummed i' the wood, the mink Went fishing down the river-brink. In fields with bean or clover gay, The woodchuck, like a hermit grav, Peered from the doorway of his cell: 345 The muskrat plied the mason's trade, And tier by tier his mud-walls laid: And from the shagbark overhead The grizzled squirrel dropped his shell.

Next, the dear aunt, whose smile of cheer And voice in dreams I see and hear, —

332. Gilbert White, of Selborne, England, was a clergyman who wrote the Natural History of Selborne, a minute, affectionate, and charming description of what could be seen, as it were, from his own doorstep. The accuracy of his observation and the delightfulness of his manner have kept the book a classic.

The sweetest woman ever Fate Perverse denied a household mate. Who, lonely, homeless, not the less Found peace in love's unselfishness, 355 And welcome whereso'er she went, A calm and gracious element, Whose presence seemed the sweet income And womanly atmosphere of home, -Called up her girlhood memories, The huskings and the apple-bees, The sleigh-rides and the summer sails, Weaving through all the poor details And homespun warp of circumstance A golden woof-thread of romance. 265 For well she kept her genial mood And simple faith of maidenhood; Before her still a cloud-land lay, The mirage loomed across her way: The morning dew, that dries so soon 370 With others, glistened at her noon; Through years of toil and soil and care, From glossy tress to thin gray hair, All unprofaned she held apart The virgin fancies of the heart. 375 Be shame to him of woman born Who hath for such but thought of scorn.

There, too, our elder sister plied Her evening task the stand beside; A full, rich nature, free to trust, Truthful and almost sternly just, Impulsive, earnest, prompt to act, And make her generous thought a fact, Keeping with many a light disguise The secret of self-sacrifice.

O heart sore-tried! thou hast the best
That Heaven itself could give thee, — rest,
Rest from all bitter thoughts and things!
How many a poor one's blessing went
With thee beneath the low green tent
Whose curtain never outward swings!

As one who held herself a part Of all she saw, and let her heart Against the household bosom lean, Upon the motley-braided mat Our youngest and our dearest sat, Lifting her large, sweet, asking eyes, Now bathed in the unfading green And holy peace of Paradise. Oh, looking from some heavenly hill, Or from the shade of saintly palms, Or silver reach of river calms, Do those large eyes behold me still? With me one little year ago: -The chill weight of the winter snow For months upon her grave has lain; And now, when summer south-winds blow And brier and harebell bloom again, I tread the pleasant paths we trod, I see the violet-sprinkled sod, Whereon she leaned, too frail and weak The hillside flowers she loved to seek. Yet following me where'er I went With dark eyes full of love's content. The birds are glad; the brier-rose fills

396. Elizabeth H. Whittier, a number of whose poems were collected by her brother and added to one of his own volumes.

The air with sweetness: all the hills Stretch green to June's unclouded sky: But still I wait with ear and eye For something gone which should be nigh. A loss in all familiar things. 420 In flower that blooms, and bird that sings. And yet, dear heart! remembering thee, Am I not richer than of old? Safe in thy immortality, What change can reach the wealth I hold? 425 What chance can mar the pearl and gold Thy love hath left in trust with me? And while in life's late afternoon, Where cool and long the shadows grow, I walk to meet the night that soon 430 Shall shape and shadow overflow, I cannot feel that thou art far. Since near at need the angels are; And when the sunset gates unbar, Shall I not see thee waiting stand, 435 And, white against the evening star, The welcome of thy beckoning hand?

Brisk wielder of the birch and rule,
The master of the district school
Held at the fire his favored place;
Its warm glow lit a laughing face
Fresh-hued and fair, where scarce appeared
The uncertain prophecy of beard.
He teased the mitten-blinded cat,
Played cross-pins on my uncle's hat,
Sang songs, and told us what befalls
In classic Dartmouth's college halls.
Born the wild Northern hills among,

From whence his yeoman father wrung By patient toil subsistence scant, 458 Not competence and vet not want, He early gained the power to pay His cheerful, self-reliant way; Could doff at ease his scholar's gown To peddle wares from town to town: 455 Or through the long vacation's reach In lonely lowland districts teach, Where all the droll experience found At stranger hearths in boarding round, The moonlit skater's keen delight, 460 The sleigh-drive through the frosty night, The rustic party, with its rough Accompaniment of blind-man's-buff. And whirling plate, and forfeits paid, His winter task a pastime made. 465 Happy the snow-locked homes wherein He tuned his merry violin, Or played the athlete in the barn, Or held the good dame's winding varn, Or mirth-provoking versions told 470 Of classic legends rare and old, Wherein the scenes of Greece and Rome Had all the commonplace of home, And little seemed at best the odds 'Twixt Yankee pedlers and old gods; 475 Where Pindus-born Arachthus took The guise of any grist-mill brook, And dread Olympus at his will

476. Pindus is the mountain chain which, running from north to south, nearly bisects Greece. Five rivers take their rise from the central peak, the Aöus, the Arachthus, the Haliacmon, the Peneus, and the Achelöus.

Became a huckleberry hill.
A careless boy that night he seemed;	480
But at his desk he had the look
And air of one who wisely schemed,
And hostage from the future took
In trained thought and lore of book.
Large-brained, clear-eyed, — of such as he	485
Shall Freedom's young apostles be,
Who, following in War's bloody trail,
Shall every lingering wrong assail;
All chains from limb and spirit strike,
Uplift the black and white alike;	490
Scatter before their swift advance
The darkness and the ignorance,
The pride, the lust, the squalid sloth,
Which nurtured Treason's monstrous growth,
Made murder pastime, and the hell	495
Of prison-torture possible;
The cruel lie of caste refute,
Old forms remould, and substitute
For Slavery's lash the freeman's will,
For blind routine, wise-handed skill;	500
A school-house plant on every hill,
Stretching in radiate nerve-lines thence
The quick wires of intelligence;
Till North and South together brought
Shall own the same electric thought,	805
In peace a common flag salute,
And, side by side in labor's free
And unresentful rivalry,
Harvest the fields wherein they fought.
Another guest that winter night	at e
Flashed back from lustrous eyes the light.

Unmarked by time, and yet not young, The honeyed music of her tongue And words of meekness scarcely told A nature passionate and bold, 515 Strong, self-concentred, spurning guide, Its milder features dwarfed beside Her unbent will's majestic pride. She sat among us, at the best, A not unfeared, half-welcome guest, 520 Rebuking with her cultured phrase Our homeliness of words and ways. A certain pard-like, treacherous grace Swaved the lithe limbs and dropped the lash, Lent the white teeth their dazzling flash; 525 And under low brows, black with night, Rayed out at times a dangerous light; The sharp heat-lightnings of her face Presaging ill to him whom Fate Condemned to share her love or hate. 530 A woman tropical, intense In thought and act, in soul and sense, She blended in a like degree The vixen and the devotee, Revealing with each freak or feint 535 The temper of Petruchio's Kate, The raptures of Siena's saint. Her tapering hand and rounded wrist Had facile power to form a fist; The warm, dark languish of her eyes 540 Was never safe from wrath's surprise. Brows saintly calm and lips devout

536. See Shakespeare's comedy of the Taming of the Shrew. 537. St. Catherine of Siena, who is represented as having wonderful visions. She made a vow of silence for three years. Knew every change of scowl and pout: And the sweet voice had notes more high And shrill for social battle-cry. 545 Since then what old cathedral town Has missed her pilgrim staff and gown, What convent-gate has held its lock Against the challenge of her knock! Through Smyrna's plague-hushed thoroughfares, 550 Up sea-set Malta's rocky stairs. Gray olive slopes of hills that hem Thy tombs and shrines, Jerusalem, Or startling on her desert throne The crazy Queen of Lebanon 555 With claims fantastic as her own, Her tireless feet have held their way; And still, unrestful, bowed, and gray, She watches under Eastern skies. With hope each day renewed and fresh, 560 The Lord's quick coming in the flesh, Whereof she dreams and prophesies!

555. An interesting account of Lady Hester Stanhope, an English gentlewoman who led a singular life on Mount Lebanon in Syria, will be found in Kinglake's Eothen, chapter viii.

562. This not unfeared, half-welcome guest was Miss Harriet Livermore, daughter of Judge Livermore of New Hampshire. She was a woman of fine powers, but wayward, wild, and enthutiastic. She went on an independent mission to the Western Indians, whom she, in common with some others, believed to be remnants of the lost tribes of Israel. At the time of this narrative she was about twenty-eight years old, but much of her life afterward was spent in the Orient. She was at one time the companion and friend of Lady Hester Stanhope, but finally quarrelled with her about the use of the holy horses kept in the stable in waiting for the Lord's ride to Jerusalem at the second advent.

Where'er her troubled path may be,
The Lord's sweet pity with her go!
The outward wayward life we see,	568
The hidden springs we may not know.
Nor is it given us to discern
What threads the fatal sisters spun,
Through what ancestral years has run
The sorrow with the woman born,	570
What forged her cruel chain of moods,
What set her feet in solitudes,
And held the love within her mute,
What mingled madness in the blood,
A lifelong discord and annoy,	573
Water of tears with oil of joy,
And hid within the folded bud
Perversities of flower and fruit.
It is not ours to separate
The tangled skein of will and fate,	580
To show what metes and bounds should stand
Upon the soul's debatable land,
And between choice and Providence
Divide the circle of events;
But He who knows our frame is just,	585
Merciful and compassionate,
And full of sweet assurances
And hope for all the language is,
That He remembereth we are dust!
At last the great logs, crumbling low,	590
Sent out a dull and duller glow,
The bull's-eye watch that hung in view,
Ticking its weary circuit through,
Pointed with mutely-warning sign
Its black hand to the hour of nine.	595

That sign the pleasant circle broke: My uncle ceased his pipe to smoke, Knocked from its bowl the refuse grav. And laid it tenderly away, Then roused himself to safely cover 600 The dull red brands with ashes over. And while, with care, our mother laid The work aside, her steps she stayed One moment, seeking to express Her grateful sense of happiness 605 For food and shelter, warmth and health. And love's contentment more than wealth. With simple wishes (not the weak, Vain prayers which no fulfilment seek, But such as warm the generous heart, 810 O'er-prompt to do with Heaven its part) That none might lack, that bitter night, For bread and clothing, warmth and light.

Within our beds awhile we heard
The wind that round the gables roared,
With now and then a ruder shock,
Which made our very bedsteads rock.
We heard the loosened clapboards tost,
The board-nails snapping in the frost;
And on us, through the unplastered wall,
Felt the light sifted snow-flakes fall.
But sleep stole on, as sleep will do
When hearts are light and life is new;
Faint and more faint the murmurs grew,
Till in the summer-land of dreams
They softened to the sound of streams,
Low stir of leaves, and dip of oars,
And lapsing waves on quiet shores.

Next morn we wakened with the shout Of merry voices high and clear; 636 And saw the teamsters drawing near To break the drifted highways out. Down the long hillside treading slow We saw the half-buried oxen go. Shaking the snow from heads uptost, 635 Their straining nostrils white with frost. Before our door the straggling train Drew up, an added team to gain. The elders threshed their hands a-cold. Passed, with the cider-mug, their jokes 640 From lip to lip; the younger folks Down the loose snow-banks, wrestling, rolled, Then toiled again the cavalcade O'er windy hill, through clogged ravine, And woodland paths that wound between 645 Low drooping pine-boughs winter-weighed. From every barn a team afoot, At every house a new recruit, Where, drawn by Nature's subtlest law, Haply the watchful young men saw * 650 Sweet doorway pictures of the curls And curious eyes of merry girls, Lifting their hands in mock defence Against the snow-balls' compliments, And reading in each missive tost 655 The charm with Eden never lost.

We heard once more the sleigh-bells' sound; And, following where the teamsters led, The wise old Doctor went his round,

659. The wise old Doctor was Dr. Weld of Haverhill, an able man, who died at the age of ninety-six.

Just pausing at our door to say In the brief autocratic way Of one who, prompt at Duty's call, Was free to urge her claim on all. That some poor neighbor sick abed At night our mother's aid would need. 665 For, one in generous thought and deed, What mattered in the sufferer's sight The Quaker matron's inward light, The Doctor's mail of Calvin's creed? All hearts confess the saints elect 670 Who, twain in faith, in love agree, And melt not in an acid sect The Christian pearl of charity!

So days went on: a week had passed
Since the great world was heard from last.
The Almanac we studied o'er,
Read and reread our little store
Of books and pamphlets, scarce a score;
One harmless novel, mostly hid
From younger eyes, a book forbid,
And poetry, (or good or bad,
A single book was all we had,)
Where Ellwood's meek, drab-skirted Muse,
A stranger to the heathen Nine,
Sang, with a somewhat nasal whine,

683. Thomas Ellwood, one of the Society of Friends, a contemporary and friend of Milton, and the suggestor of Paradise Regained, wrote an epic poem in five books, called Davideis, the life of King David of Israel. He wrote the book, we are told, for his own diversion, so it was not necessary that others should be diverted by it. Ellwood's autobiography, a quaint and delightful book, is included in Howells's series of Choice Autobiographies.

The wars of David and the Jews. At last the floundering carrier bore The village paper to our door. Lo! broadening outward as we read, To warmer zones the horizon spread; 694 In panoramic length unrolled We saw the marvels that it told. Before us passed the painted Creeks, And daft McGregor on his raids In Costa Rica's everglades. 695 And up Taygetus winding slow Rode Ypsilanti's Mainote Greeks, A Turk's head at each saddle bow! Welcome to us its week old news. Its corner for the rustic Muse, 700 Its monthly gauge of snow and rain, Its record, mingling in a breath The wedding knell and dirge of death; Jest, anecdote, and love-lorn tale, The latest culprit sent to jail; 705 Its hue and cry of stolen and lost, Its vendue sales and goods at cost. And traffic calling loud for gain. We felt the stir of hall and street. The pulse of life that round us beat: 710 The chill embargo of the snow

693. Referring to the removal of the Creek Indians from Georgia to beyond the Mississippi.

694. In 1822 Sir Gregor McGregor, a Scotchman, began an ineffectual attempt to establish a colony in Costa Rica.

697. Taygetus is a mountain on the Gulf of Messenia in Greece, and near by is the district of Maina, noted for its robbers and pirates. It was from these mountaineers that Ypsilanti, a Greek patriot, drew his cavalry in the struggle with Turkey which resulted in the independence of Greece.

Was melted in the genial glow; Wide swung again our ice-locked door, And all the world was ours once more!

Clasp, Angel of the backward look 715 And folded wings of ashen gray And voice of echoes far away, The brazen covers of thy book; The weird palimpsest old and vast, Wherein thou hid'st the spectral past; 720 Where, closely mingling, pale and glow The characters of joy and woe; The monographs of outlived years, Or smile-illumed or dim with tears, Green hills of life that slope to death, 725 And haunts of home, whose vistaed trees Shade off to mournful cypresses With the white amaranths underneath. Even while I look, I can but heed The restless sands' incessant fall, 730 Importunate hours that hours succeed, Each clamorous with its own sharp need, And duty keeping pace with all. Shut down and clasp the heavy lids; I hear again the voice that bids 735 The dreamer leave his dream midway For larger hopes and graver fears: Life greatens in these later years, The century's aloe flowers to-day!

Yet, haply, in some lull of life, Some Truce of God which breaks its strife,

The worldling's eves shall gather dew, Dreaming in throngful city ways Of winter joys his boyhood knew; And dear and early friends - the few 745 Who yet remain — shall pause to view These Flemish pictures of old days; Sit with me by the homestead hearth, And stretch the hands of memory forth To warm them at the wood-fire's blaze! 750 And thanks untraced to lips unknown Shall greet me like the odors blown From unseen meadows newly mown. Or lilies floating in some pond, Wood-fringed, the wayside gaze beyond: 755 The traveller owns the grateful sense Of sweetness near, he knows not whence, And, pausing, takes with forehead bare The benediction of the air.

other between sunset on Wednesday and sunrise on the following Monday, or upon any ecclesiastical fast or feast day. It also provided that no man was to molest a laborer working in the fields, or to lay hands on any implement of husbandry, on pain of excommunication.

AMONG THE HILLS.

PRELUDE.

ALONG the roadside, like the flowers of gold That tawny Incas for their gardens wrought, Heavy with sunshine droops the golden-rod, And the red pennons of the cardinal-flowers Hang motionless upon their upright staves. The sky is hot and hazy, and the wind, Wing-weary with its long flight from the south, Unfelt; yet, closely scanned, you maple leaf With faintest motion, as one stirs in dreams, Confesses it. The locust by the wall Stabs the noon-silence with his sharp alarm. A single hay-cart down the dusty road Creaks slowly, with its driver fast asleep On the load's top. Against the neighboring hill, Huddled along the stone wall's shady side, The sheep show white, as if a snowdrift still Defied the dog-star. Through the open door A drowsy smell of flowers - gray heliotrope, And white sweet clover, and shy mignonette -Comes faintly in, and silent chorus lends To the pervading symphony of peace.

No time is this for hands long over-worn To task their strength: and (unto Him be praise

2. The Incas were the kings of the ancient Peruvians. At Yucay, their favorite residence, the gardens, according to Prescott, contained "forms of vegetable life skilfully imitated in gold and silver." See History of the Conquest of Peru, i. 130.

Who giveth quietness!) the stress and strain
Of years that did the work of centuries
Have ceased, and we can draw our breath once more
Freely and full. So, as yon harvesters
Make glad their nooning underneath the elms
With tale and riddle and old snatch of song,
I lay aside grave themes, and idly turn
The leaves of memory's sketch-book, dreaming o'er
Old summer pictures of the quiet hills,
And human life, as quiet, at their feet.

And yet not idly all. A farmer's son, Proud of field-lore and harvest craft, and feeling 35 All their fine possibilities, how rich And restful even poverty and toil Become when beauty, harmony, and love Sit at their humble hearth as angels sat At evening in the patriarch's tent, when man 40 Makes labor noble, and his farmer's frock .The symbol of a Christian chivalry Tender and just and generous to her Who clothes with grace all duty; still, I know Too well the picture has another side, — 45 How wearily the grind of toil goes on Where love is wanting, how the eye and ear And heart are starved amidst the plenitude Of nature, and how hard and colorless Is life without an atmosphere. I look 50 Across the lapse of half a century, And call to mind old homesteads, where no flower Told that the spring had come, but evil weeds, Nightshade and rough-leaved burdock in the place

26. The volume in which this poem stands first, and to which it gives the name, was published in the fall of 1868.

Of the sweet doorway greeting of the rose 55 And honeysuckle, where the house walls seemed Blistering in sun, without a tree or vine To cast the tremulous shadow of its leaves Across the curtainless windows, from whose panes Fluttered the signal rags of shiftlessness. 60 Within, the cluttered kitchen-floor, unwashed (Broom-clean I think they called it); the best room Stifling with cellar damp, shut from the air In hot midsummer, bookless, pictureless Save the inevitable sampler hung 65 Over the fireplace, or a mourning piece, A green-haired woman, peony-cheeked, beneath Impossible willows; the wide-throated hearth Bristling with faded pine-boughs half concealing The piled-up rubbish at the chimney's back; 70 And, in sad keeping with all things about them, Shrill, querulous women, sour and sullen men, Untidy, leveless, old before their time, With scarce a human interest save their own Monotonous round of small economies, 75 Or the poor scandal of the neighborhood; Blind to the beauty everywhere revealed, Treading the May-flowers with regardless feet; For them the song-sparrow and the bobolink Sang not, nor winds made music in the leaves; 80 For them in vain October's holocaust Burned, gold and crimson, over all the hills, The sacramental mystery of the woods. Church-goers, fearful of the unseen Powers, But grumbling over pulpit-tax and pew-rent, Saving, as shrewd economists, their souls And winter pork with the least possible outlay Of salt and sanctity; in daily life

Showing as little actual comprehension
Of Christian charity and love and duty,
As if the Sermon on the Mount had been
Outdated like a last year's almanac:
Rich in broad woodlands and in half-tilled fields,
And yet so pinched and bare and comfortless,
The veriest straggler limping on his rounds,
The sun and air his sole inheritance,
Laughed at a poverty that paid its taxes,
And hugged his rags in self-complacency!

Not such should be the homesteads of a land Where whose wisely wills and acts may dwell 100 As king and lawgiver, in broad-acred state, With beauty, art, taste, culture, books, to make His hour of leisure richer than a life Of fourscore to the barons of old time, Our yeoman should be equal to his home 105 Set in the fair, green valleys, purple walled, A man to match his mountains, not to creep Dwarfed and abased below them. I would fain In this light way (of which I needs must own With the knife-grinder of whom Canning sings, 110 "Story, God bless you! I have none to tell you!") Invite the eye to see and heart to feel The beauty and the joy within their reach, -Home, and home loves, and the beatitudes

110. The Anti-Jacobin was a periodical published in England in 1797-98, to ridicule democratic opinions, and in it Canning, who afterward became premier of England, wrote many light verses and jeux d'esprit, among them a humorous poem called the Needy Knife-Grinder, in burlesque of a poem by Southey. The knife-grinder is anxiously appealed to to tell his story of wrong and injustice, but answers as here:—

[&]quot;Story, God bless you! I 've none to tell."

Of nature free to all. Haply in years
That wait to take the places of our own,
Heard where some breezy balcony looks down
On happy homes, or where the lake in the moon
Sleeps dreaming of the mountains, fair as Ruth,
In the old Hebrew pastoral, at the feet
Of Boaz, even this simple lay of mine
May seem the burden of a prophecy,
Finding its late fulfilment in a change
Slow as the oak's growth, lifting manhood up
Through broader culture, finer manners, love,
And reverence, to the level of the hills.

O Golden Age, whose light is of the dawn, And not of sunset, forward, not behind, Flood the new heavens and earth, and with thee bring All the old virtues, whatsoever things 130 Are pure and honest and of good repute, But add thereto whatever bard has sung Or seer has told of when in trance and dream They saw the Happy Isles of prophecy! Let Justice hold her scale, and Truth divide 135 Between the right and wrong, but give the heart The freedom of its fair inheritance; Let the poor prisoner, cramped and starved so long, At Nature's table feast his ear and eye With joy and wonder; let all harmonies 140 Of sound, form, color, motion, wait upon The princely guest, whether in soft attire Of leisure clad, or the coarse frock of toil, And, lending life to the dead form of faith, Give human nature reverence for the sake 145 Of One who bore it, making it divine 134. See note to l. 337, p. 185.

With the ineffable tenderness of God;
Let common need, the brotherhood of prayer,
The heirship of an unknown destiny,
The unsolved mystery round about us, make
A man more precious than the gold of Ophir.
Sacred, inviolate, unto whom all things
Should minister, as outward types and signs
Of the eternal beauty which fulfils
The one great purpose of creation, Love,
The sole necessity of Earth and Heaven!

AMONG THE HILLS.

For weeks the clouds had raked the hills
And vexed the vales with raining,
And all the woods were sad with mist,
And all the brooks complaining.

At last, a sudden night-storm tore
The mountain veils asunder,
And swept the valleys clean before
The besom of the thunder.

Through Sandwich notch the west-wind sang
Good morrow to the cotter;
And once again Chocorua's horn
Of shadow pierced the water.

165. Sandwich Notch, Chocorua Mountain, Ossipee Lake, and the Bearcamp River are all striking features of the scenery in that part of New Hampshire which lies just at the entrance of the White Mountain region. Many of Whittier's most graceful poems are drawn from the suggestions of this country, long a favorite summer resort of his, and a mountain near West Ossipee has received his name.

Above his broad lake Ossipee, Once more the sunshine wearing, Stooped, tracing on that silver shield His grim armorial bearing.	170
Clear drawn against the hard blue sky, The peaks had winter's keenness; And, close on autumn's frost, the vales Had more than June's fresh greenness.	175
Again the sodden forest floors With golden lights were checkered, Once more rejoicing leaves in wind And sunshine danced and flickered.	180
It was as if the summer's late Atoning for its sadness Had borrowed every season's charm To end its days in gladness.
I call to mind those banded vales Of shadow and of shining, Through which, my hostess at my side, I drove in day's declining.	285
We held our sideling way above The river's whitening shallows, By homesteads old, with wide-flung barns Swept through and through by swallows;	190
By maple orchards, belts of pine And larches climbing darkly The mountain slopes, and, over all, The great peaks rising starkly.	198

You should have seen that long hill-range
With gaps of brightness riven,—
How through each pass and hollow streamed
The purpling lights of heaven,—

200

205

210

215

220

Rivers of gold-mist flowing down
From far celestial fountains,—
The great sun flaming through the rifts
Beyond the wall of mountains!

We paused at last where home-bound cows
Brought down the pasture's treasure,
And in the barn the rhythmic flails
Beat out a harvest measure.

We heard the night-hawk's sullen plunge,
The crow his tree-mates calling:
The shadows lengthening down the slopes
About our feet were falling.

And through them smote the level sun
In broken lines of splendor,
Touched the gray rocks and made the green
Of the shorn grass more tender.

The maples bending o'er the gate,
Their arch of leaves just tinted
With yellow warmth, the golden glow
Of coming autumn hinted.

Keen white between the farm-house showed,
And smiled on porch and trellis,
The fair democracy of flowers
That equals cot and palace.

And weaving garlands for her dog, 'Twixt chidings and caresses, A human flower of childhood shook The sunshine from her tresses.	225
On either hand we saw the signs Of fancy and of shrewdness, Where taste had wound its arms of vines Round thrift's uncomely rudeness.	230
The sun-brown farmer in his frock Shook hands, and called to Mary: Bare-armed, as Juno might, she came, White-aproned from her dairy.	235
Her air, her smile, her motions, told Of womanly completeness; A music as of household songs Was in her voice of sweetness.	240
Not fair alone in curve and line, But something more and better, The secret charm eluding art, Its spirit, not its letter;—
An inborn grace that nothing lacked Of culture or appliance,— The warmth of genial courtesy, The calm of self-reliance.	245
Before her queenly womanhood How dared our hostess utter The paltry errand of her need To buy her fresh-churned butter?	250

She led the way with housewife pride,
Her goodly store disclosing,
Full tenderly the golden balls
With practised hands disposing.

Then, while along the western hills We watched the changeful glory Of sunset, on our homeward way, I heard her simple story.

The early crickets sang; the stream
Plashed through my friend's narration:
Her rustic patois of the hills
Lost in my free translation.

275

- "More wise," she said, "than those who swarm 2
 Our hills in middle summer,
 She came, when June's first roses blow,
 To greet the early comer.
- "From school and ball and rout she came,
 The city's fair, pale daughter,
 To drink the wine of mountain air
 Beside the Bearcamp Water.
- "Her step grew firmer on the hills
 That watch our homesteads over;
 On cheek and lip, from summer fields,
 She caught the bloom of clover.
- "For health comes sparkling in the streams From cool Chocorua stealing: There's iron in our Northern winds; Our pines are trees of healing.

- "She sat beneath the broad-armed elms That skirt the mowing-meadow, And watched the gentle west-wind weave The grass with shine and shadow. "Beside her, from the summer heat 285 To share her grateful screening, With forehead bared, the farmer stood, Upon his pitchfork leaning. "Framed in its damp, dark locks, his face Had nothing mean or common, -290 Strong, manly, true, the tenderness And pride beloved of woman. "She looked up, glowing with the health The country air had brought her, And, laughing, said: 'You lack a wife, 295 Your mother lacks a daughter. "'To mend your frock and bake your bread You do not need a lady: Be sure among these brown old homes Is some one waiting ready, -300
 - "'Some fair, sweet girl with skilful hand
 And cheerful heart for treasure,
 Who never played with ivory keys,
 Or danced the polka's measure.'
 - "He bent his black brows to a frown,

 He set his white teeth tightly.

 'T is well,' he said, 'for one like you

 To choose for me so lightly.

315

320

325

330

- "'You think, because my life is rude
 I take no note of sweetness:
 I tell you love has naught to do
 With meetness or unmeetness.
- "'Itself its best excuse, it asks
 No leave of pride or fashion
 When silken zone or homespun frock
 It stirs with throbs of passion.
- "'You think me deaf and blind: you bring
 Your winning graces hither
 As free as if from cradle-time
 We two had played together.
- "'You tempt me with your laughing eyes,
 Your cheek of sundown's blushes,
 A motion as of waving grain,
 A music as of thrushes.
- "The plaything of your summer sport,
 The spells you weave around me
 You cannot at your will undo,
 Nor leave me as you found me.
- "'You go as lightly as you came, Your life is well without me; What care you that these hills will close Like prison-walls about me?
- "'No mood is mine to seek a wife, Or daughter for my mother: Who loves you loses in that love All power to love another!

and the second second
"'I dare your pity or your scorn, With pride your own exceeding; I fling my heart into your lap Without a word of pleading.'	24.0
"She looked up in his face of pain So archly, yet so tender: 'And if I lend you mine,' she said, 'Will you forgive the lender?
"' Nor frock nor tan can hide the man; And see you not, my farmer, How weak and fond a woman waits Behind this silken armor?	34 5
"'I love you: on that love alone, And not my worth, presuming, Will you not trust for summer fruit The tree in May-day blooming?'	850
"Alone the hangbird overhead, His hair-swung cradle straining, Looked down to see love's miracle, The giving that is gaining.	355
"And so the farmer found a wife, His mother found a daughter: There looks no happier home than hers

"Flowers spring to blossom where she walks
The careful ways of duty;
Our hard, stiff lines of life with her
Are flowing curves of beauty.

On pleasant Bearcamp Water.

876

375

385

- "Our homes are cheerier for her sake, Our door-yards brighter blooming, And all about the social air Is sweeter for her coming.
- "Unspoken homilies of peace
 Her daily life is preaching;
 The still refreshment of the dew
 Is her unconscious teaching.
- "And never tenderer hand than hers
 Unknits the brow of ailing;
 Her garments to the sick man's ear
 Have music in their trailing.
- "And when, in pleasant harvest moons,
 The youthful huskers gather,
 Or sleigh-drives on the mountain ways
 Defy the winter weather,—
- In sugar-camps, when south and warm
 The winds of March are blowing,
 And sweetly from its thawing veins
 The maple's blood is flowing,—
- Its virgin zone is baring,
 Or where the ruddy autumn fire
 Lights up the apple-paring,—
- The coarseness of a ruder time Her finer mirth displaces, A subtler sense of pleasure fills Each rustic sport she graces.

"Her presence lends its warmth and health To all who come before it. If woman lost us Eden, such As she alone restore it.	3 95
"For larger life and wiser aims The farmer is her debtor; Who holds to his another's heart
Must needs be worse or better.	403
"Through her his civic service shows A purer-toned ambition; No double consciousness divides The man and politician.
"In party's doubtful ways he trusts Her instincts to determine; At the loud polls, the thought of her Recalls Christ's Mountain Sermon.	€05
"He owns her logic of the heart, And wisdom of unreason, Supplying, while he doubts and weighs, The needed word in season.	410
"He sees with pride her richer thought, Her fancy's freer ranges; And love thus deepened to respect Is proof against all changes.	415
"And if she walks at ease in ways His feet are slow to travel, And if she reads with cultured eyes What his may scarce unravel,	420

- "Still clearer, for her keener sight
 Of beauty and of wonder,
 He learns the meaning of the hills
 He dwelt from childhood under.
- "And higher, warmed with summer lights,
 Or winter-crowned and hoary,
 The ridged horizon lifts for him
 Its inner veils of glory.

430

435

440

- "He has his own free, bookless lore,
 The lessons nature taught him,
 The wisdom which the woods and hills
 And toiling men have brought him:
- "The steady force of will whereby
 Her flexile grace seems sweeter;
 The sturdy counterpoise which makes
 Her woman's life completer;
- "A latent fire of soul which lacks
 No breath of love to fan it;
 And wit, that, like his native brooks,
 Plays over solid granite.
- "How dwarfed against his manliness
 She sees the poor pretension,
 The wants, the aims, the follies, born
 Of fashion and convention!
- "How life behind its accidents
 Stands strong and self-sustaining,
 The human fact transcending all
 The losing and the gaining.

"And so in grateful interchange Of teacher and of hearer, Their lives their true distinctness keep While daily drawing nearer.	4 50
"And if the husband or the wife In home's strong light discovers Such slight defaults as failed to meet The blinded eyes of lovers,	455
"Why need we care to ask? — who dreams Without their thorns of roses, Or wonders that the truest steel The readiest spark discloses?	160
"For still in mutual sufferance lies The secret of true living; Love scarce is love that never knows The sweetness of forgiving.
"We send the Squire to General Court, He takes his young wife thither; No prouder man election day Rides through the sweet June weather.	465
"He sees with eyes of manly trust All hearts to her inclining; Not less for him his household light That others share its shining."	470
Thus, while my hostess spake, there grew Before me, warmer tinted And outlined with a tenderer grace, The picture that she hinted	4 75

The sunset smouldered as we drove
Beneath the deep hill-shadows.
Below us wreaths of white fog walked
Like ghosts the haunted meadows.

Sounding the summer night, the stars
Dropped down their golden plummets;
The pale arc of the Northern lights
Rose o'er the mountain summits,

Until, at last, beneath its bridge,
We heard the Bearcamp flowing,
And saw across the maple lawn
The welcome home-lights glowing.

And, musing on the tale I heard,
'T were well, thought I, if often
To rugged farm-life came the gift
To harmonize and soften;

If more and more we found the troth
Of fact and fancy plighted,
And culture's charm and labor's strength
In rural homes united,—

The simple life, the homely hearth,
With beauty's sphere surrounding,
And blessing toil where toil abounds
With graces more abounding.

MABEL MARTIN.

[This poem was published in 1875, but it had already appeared in an earlier version in 1860 under the title of The Witch's Daughter, in Home Ballads and other Poems. Mabel Martin is in the same measure as The Witch's Daughter, and many of the verses are the same, but the poet has taken the first draft as a sketch, filled it out, adding verses here and there, altering lines and making an introduction, so that the new version is a third longer than the old. The reader will find it interesting to compare the two poems. The scene is laid on the Merrimack, as Deer Island and Hawkswood near Newburyport intimate. A fruitful comparison might be drawn between the treatment of such subjects by Whittier and by Hawthorne.]

PART I.

THE RIVER VALLEY.

Across the level table-land,
A grassy, rarely trodden way,
With thinnest skirt of birchen spray

And stunted growth of cedar, leads

To where you see the dull plain fall

Sheer off, steep-slanted, ploughed by all

The seasons' rainfalls. On its brink

The over-leaning harebells swing;

With roots half bare the pine-trees cling;

And, through the shadow looking west,
You see the wavering river flow
Along a vale, that far below

Holds to the sun, the sheltering hills
And glimmering water-line between,
Broad fields of corn and meadows green,

And fruit-bent orchards grouped around
The low brown roofs and painted eaves,
And chimney-tops half hid in leaves.

No warmer valley hides behind
You wind-scourged sand-dunes, cold and bleak; 20
No fairer river comes to seek

9.5

80

35

The wave-sung welcome of the sea, Or mark the northmost border line Of sun-loved growths of nut and vine.

Here, ground-fast in their native fields, Untempted by the city's gain, The quiet farmer folk remain

Who bear the pleasant name of Friends, And keep their fathers' gentle ways And simple speech of Bible days;

In whose neat homesteads woman holds With modest ease her equal place, And wears upon her tranquil face

The look of one who, merging not Her self-hood in another's will, Is love's and duty's handmaid still.

Pass with me down the path that winds
Through birches to the open land,
Where, close upon the river strand,

You mark a cellar, vine o'errun,
Above whose wall of loosened stones
The sumach lifts its reddening cones,

40

And the black nightshade's berries shine, And broad, unsightly burdocks fold The household ruin, century-old.

45

Here, in the dim colonial time
Of sterner lives and gloomier faith,
A woman lived, tradition saith,

Who wrought her neighbors foul annoy,
And witched and plagued the country-side,
Till at the hangman's hand she died.

Sit with me while the westering day
Falls slantwise down the quiet vale,
And, haply, ere you loitering sail,

That rounds the upper headland, falls Below Deer Island's pines, or sees Behind it Hawkswood's belt of trees

55

Rise black against the sinking sun, My idyl of its days of old, The valley's legend, shall be told.

60

PART II.

THE HUSKING.

It was the pleasant harvest-time,
When cellar-bins are closely stowed,
And garrets bend beneath their load,

And the old swallow-haunted barns, —
Brown-gabled, long, and full of seams
Through which the moted sunlight streams,

And winds blow freshly in, to shake

The red plumes of the roosted cocks,

And the loose hay-mow's scented locks,—

74

90

Are filled with summer's ripened stores, Its odorous grass and barley sheaves, From their low scaffolds to their eaves.

On Esek Harden's oaken floor,
With many an autumn threshing worn,
Lay the heaped ears of unhusked corn.

And thither came young men and maids, Beneath a moon that, large and low, Lit that sweet eve of long ago.

They took their places; some by chance, And others by a merry voice Or sweet smile guided to their choice.

How pleasantly the rising moon,

Between the shadow of the mows,

Looked on them through the great elm-boughs!

On sturdy boyhood, sun-embrowned, On girlhood with its solid curves Of healthful strength and painless nerves!

And jests went round, and laughs that made
The house-dog answer with his howl,
And kept astir the barn-yard fowl;

And quaint old songs their fathers sung
In Derby dales and Yorkshire moors,
Ere Norman William trod their shores;

And tales, whose merry license shook
The fat sides of the Saxon thane,
Forgetful of the hovering Dane,—

95

Rude plays to Celt and Cimbri known,

The charms and riddles that beguiled
On Oxus' banks the young world's child,—

That primal picture-speech wherein Have youth and maid the story told, So new in each, so dateless old,

100

Recalling pastoral Ruth in her
Who waited, blushing and demure,
The red-ear's kiss of forfeiture.

105

PART III.

THE WITCH'S DAUGHTER.

But still the sweetest voice was mute That river-valley ever heard From lips of maid or throat of bird;

99. The Oxus, which was the great river of Upper Asia, flowed past what has been regarded as the birthplace of Western people, who emigrated from that centre. Some of the riddles and plays which we have are of great antiquity, and may have been handed down from the time when our ancestors were still Asiatics.

For Mabel Martin sat apart, And let the hay-mow's shadow fall Upon the loveliest face of all.

110

She sat apart, as one forbid, Who knew that none would condescend To own the Witch-wife's child a friend.

115

The seasons scarce had gone their round, Since curious thousands thronged to see Her mother at the gallows-tree;

And mocked the prison-palsied limbs That faltered on the fatal stairs. And wan lip trembling with its prayers!

120

Few questioned of the sorrowing child, Or, when they saw the mother die, Dreamed of the daughter's agony.

They went up to their homes that day, As men and Christians justified: God willed it, and the wretch had died!

125

Dear God and Father of us all, Forgive our faith in cruel lies, -Forgive the blindness that denies!

Forgive Thy creature when he takes, For the all-perfect love Thou art, Some grim creation of his heart.

117. In Upham's History of Salem Witchcraft will be found an account of the trial and execution of Susanna. Martin for witchcraft.

Cast down our idols, overturn
Our bloody altars; let us see
Thyself in Thy humanity!

Young Mabel from her mother's grave Crept to her desolate hearth-stone, And wrestled with her fate alone;

With love, and anger, and despair,
The phantoms of disordered sense,
The awful doubts of Providence!

140

Oh, dreary broke the winter days,
And dreary fell the winter nights
When, one by one, the neighboring lights

Went out, and human sounds grew still,

And all the phantom-peopled dark

Closed round her hearth-fire's dying spark.

145

And summer days were sad and long, And sad the uncompanioned eves, And sadder sunset-tinted leaves,

150

And Indian Summer's airs of balm; She scarcely felt the soft caress, The beauty died of loneliness!

The school-boys jeered her as they passed,
And, when she sought the house of prayer,
Her mother's curse pursued her there.

155

And still o'er many a neighboring door She saw the horseshoe's curvéd charm, To guard against her mother's harm: That mother, poor and sick and lame,
Who daily, by the old arm-chair,
Folded her withered hands in prayer;—

1/00

165

170

175

180

- Who turned, in Salem's dreary jail,
 Her worn old Bible o'er and o'er,
 When her dim eyes could read no more!
- Sore tried and pained, the poor girl kept Her faith, and trusted that her way, So dark, would somewhere meet the day.
- And still her weary wheel went round
 Day after day, with no relief:
 Small leisure have the poor for grief.

PART IV.

THE CHAMPION.

- So in the shadow Mabel sits; Untouched by mirth she sees and hears, Her smile is sadder than her tears.
- But cruel eyes have found her out,
 And cruel lips repeat her name,
 And taunt her with her mother's shame.
- She answered not with railing words, But drew her apron o'er her face, And, sobbing, glided from the place.
- And only pausing at the door,

 Her sad eyes met the troubled gaze

 Of one who, in her better days,

Had been her warm and steady friend, Ere yet her mother's doom had made Even Esek Harden half afraid.

185

He felt that mute appeal of tears,
And, starting, with an angry frown,
Hushed all the wicked murmurs down.

190

- "Good neighbors mine," he sternly said,
 "This passes harmless mirth or jest;
 I brook no insult to my guest.
- "She is indeed her mother's child; But God's sweet pity ministers Unto no whiter soul than hers.

195

"Let Goody Martin rest in peace;
I never knew her harm a fly,
And witch or not, God knows—not I.

"I know who swore her life away;
And as God lives, I'd not condemn
An Indian dog on word of them."

200

The broadest lands in all the town,

The skill to guide, the power to awe,

Were Harden's; and his word was law.

205

- None dared withstand him to his face, But one sly maiden spake aside: "The little witch is evil-eyed!
- "Her mother only killed a cow,
 Or witched a churn or dairy-pan;
 But she, forsooth, must charm a man!"

210

PART V.

IN THE SHADOW.

Poor Mabel, homeward turning, passed
The nameless terrors of the wood,
And saw, as if a ghost pursued,

Her shadow gliding in the moon;

The soft breath of the west-wind gave
A chill as from her mother's grave.

215

225

238

How dreary seemed the silent house!
Wide in the moonbeams' ghastly glare
Its windows had a dead man's stare!

And, like a gaunt and spectral hand,

The tremulous shadow of a birch

Reached out and touched the door's low porch,

As if to lift its latch; hard by,
A sudden warning call she heard,
The night-cry of a brooding bird.

She leaned against the door; her face, So fair, so young, so full of pain, White in the moonlight's silver rain.

The river, on its pebbled rim,

Made music such as childhood knew;

The door-yard tree was whispered through

By voices such as childhood's ear

Had heard in moonlights long ago;

And through the willow-boughs below

MABEL MARTIN.	247
She saw the rippled waters shine; Beyond, in waves of shade and light, The hills rolled off into the night.	235
She saw and heard, but over all A sense of some transforming spell, The shadow of her sick heart fell.	240
And still across the wooded space The harvest lights of Harden shone, And song and jest and laugh went on.
And he, so gentle, true, and strong, Of men the bravest and the best, Had he, too, scorned her with the rest?	245
She strove to drown her sense of wrong, And, in her old and simple way, To teach her bitter heart to pray.
Poor child! the prayer, begun in faith, Grew to a low, despairing cry Of utter misery: "Let me die!	250
Oh, take me from the scornful eyes, And hide me where the cruel speech And mocking finger may not reach!	25

"I dare not breathe my mother's name: A daughter's right I dare not crave To weep above her unblest grave!

"Let me not live until my heart, With few to pity, and with none To love me, hardens into stone.

"O God! have mercy on Thy child,
Whose faith in Thee grows weak and small,
And take me ere I lose it all!"

A shadow on the moonlight fell,

And murmuring wind and wave became

A voice whose burden was her name.

PART VI.

THE BETROTHAL.

Had then God heard her? Had He sent His angel down? In flesh and blood, Before her Esek Harden stood!

He laid his hand upon her arm:
"Dear Mabel, this no more shall be;
Who scoffs at you must scoff at me.

"You know rough Esek Harden well; And if he seems no suitor gay, And if his hair is touched with gray,

"The maiden grown shall never find His heart less warm than when she smiled, Upon his knees, a little child!"

Her tears of grief were tears of joy, As, folded in his strong embrace, She looked in Esek Harden's face.

"God bless you for your kindly thought,
And make me worthy of my lot!"

300

310

He led her forth, and, blent in one,
Beside their happy pathway ran
The shadows of the maid and man.

- He led her through his dewy fields,

 To where the swinging lanterns glowed,

 And through the doors the huskers showed.
- "Good friends and neighbors!" Esek said,
 "I'm weary of this lonely life;
 In Mabel see my chosen wife!
- "She greets you kindly, one and all;
 The past is past, and all offence
 Falls harmless from her innocence.
- "Henceforth she stands no more alone; You know what Esek Harden is;— He brooks no wrong to him or his.
- "Now let the merriest tales be told,
 And let the sweetest songs be sung
 That ever made the old heart young!
- "For now the lost has found a home;
 And a lone hearth shall brighter burn,
 As all the household joys return!"
 - Oh, pleasantly the harvest-moon,

 Between the shadow of the mows,

 Looked on them through the great elm-boughs!
 - On Mabel's curls of golden hair,
 On Esek's shaggy strength it fell;
 And the wind whispered, "It is well!"

COBBLER KEEZAR'S VISION.

["This ballad was written," Mr. Whittier says, "on the occasion of a Horticultural Festival. Cobbler Keezar was a noted character among the first settlers in the valley of the Merrimack."]

The beaver cut his timber
With patient teeth that day,
The minks were fish-wards, and the crows
Surveyors of highway,—

10

15

20

When Keezar sat on the hillside
Upon his cobbler's form,
With a pan of coals on either hand
To keep his waxed-ends warm.

And there, in the golden weather,

He stitched and hammered and sung;
In the brook he moistened his leather,

In the pewter mug his tongue.

Well knew the tough old Teuton
Who brewed the stoutest ale,
And he paid the good wife's reckoning
, In the coin of song and tale.

The songs they still are singing
Who dress the hills of vine,
The tales that haunt the Brocken
And whisper down the Rhine.

19. The Brocken is the highest summit of the Hartz range in Germany, and a great body of superstitions has gathered about

30

35

40

45

Woodsy and wild and lonesome,
The swift stream wound away,
Through birches and scarlet maples
Flashing in foam and spray, —

Down on the sharp-horned ledges
Plunging in steep cascade,
Tossing its white-maned waters
Against the hemlock's shade.

Woodsy and wild and lonesome,
East and west and north and south;
Only the village of fishers
Down at the river's mouth;

Only here and there a clearing,
With its farm-house rude and new,
And tree-stumps, swart as Indians,
Where the scanty harvest grew.

No shout of home-bound reapers,
No vintage-song he heard,
And on the green no dancing feet
The merry violin stirred.

"Why should folk be glum," said Keezar,
"When Nature herself is glad,
And the painted woods are laughing
At the faces so sour and sad?"

Small heed had the careless cobbler What sorrow of heart was theirs

the whole range. May-day night, called Walpurgis Night, is held to be the time of a great witch festival on the Brocken.

Who travailed in pain with the births of God, And planted a state with prayers,—

Hunting of witches and warlocks, Smiting the heathen horde,— One hand on the mason's trowel, And one on the soldier's sword!

But give him his ale and cider, Give him his pipe and song, Little he cared for Church or State, Or the balance of right and wrong.

55

60

"'T is work, work, work," he muttered,—
"And for rest a snuffle of psalms!"

He smote on his leathern apron
With his brown and waxen palms.

"Oh for the purple harvests
Of the days when I was young!
For the merry grape-stained maidens,
And the pleasant songs they sung!

"Oh for the breath of vineyards,
Of apples and nuts and wine!
For an oar to row and a breeze to blow
Down the grand old river Rhine!"

A tear in his blue eye glistened,
And dropped on his beard so gray.
"Old, old am I," said Keezar,
"And the Rhine flows far away!"

But a cunning man was the cobbler;
He could call the birds from the trees,

Charm the black snake out of the ledges, And bring back the swarming bees.

75

All the virtues of herbs and metals,
All the lore of the woods, he knew,
And the arts of the Old World mingled
With the marvels of the New.

80

Well he knew the tricks of magic,
And the lapstone on his knee
Had the gift of the Mormon's goggles,
Or the stone of Doctor Dee.

85

For the mighty master Agrippa
Wrought it with spell and rhyme
From a fragment of mystic moonstone
In the tower of Nettesheim.

To a cobbler Minnesinger

The marvellous stone gave he, —
And he gave it, in turn, to Keezar,

Who brought it over the sea.

90

He held up that mystic lapstone,
He held it up like a lens,
And he counted the long years coming
By twenties and by tens.

95

84. Dr. John Dee was a man of vast knowledge, who had an extensive museum, library, and apparatus; he claimed to be an astrologer, and had acquired the reputation of having dealings with evil spirits, and a mob was raised which destroyed the greater part of his possessions. He professed to raise the dead and had a magic crystal. He died a pauper in 1608.

85. Henry Cornelius Agrippa (1486-1535) was an alchemist.

115

120

"One hundred years," quoth Keezar,
"And fifty have I told:

Now open the new before me,
And shut me out the old!"

Like a cloud of mist, the blackness Rolled from the magic stone, And a marvellous picture mingled The unknown and the known.

Still ran the stream to the river,
And river and ocean joined;
And there were the bluffs and the blue sea-line
And cold north hills behind.

But the mighty forest was broken
By many a steepled town,
By many a white-walled farm-house,
And many a garner brown.

Turning a score of mill-wheels,

The stream no more ran free;

White sails on the winding river,

White sails on the far-off sea.

Below in the noisy village
The flags were floating gay,
And shone on a thousand faces
The light of a holiday.

Swiftly the rival ploughmen

Turned the brown earth from their shares;

Here were the farmer's treasures,

There were the craftsman's wares.

COBBLER KEEZAR'S VISION.	255
Golden the goodwife's butter, Ruby her currant-wine; Grand were the strutting turkeys, Fat were the beeves and swine.	125
Yellow and red were the apples, And the ripe pears russet-brown,	130
And the peaches had stolen blushes From the girls who shook them down.
And with blooms of hill and wild-wood, That shame the toil of art,
Mingled the gorgeous blossoms Of the garden's tropic heart.	135
"What is it I see?" said Keezar: "Am I here, or am I there? Is it a fête at Bingen?
Do I look on Frankfort fair?	140
"But where are the clowns and puppets, And imps with horns and tail? And where are the Rhenish flagons? And where is the foaming ale?
"Strange things, I know, will happen, — Strange things the Lord permits; But that droughty folk should be jolly Puzzles my poor old wits.	145
"Here are smiling manly faces, And the maiden's step is gay;	150
Nor sad by thinking, nor mad by drinking Nor mones, nor fools, are they.

"Here's pleasure without regretting,
And good without abuse,
The holiday and the bridal
Of beauty and of use.

"Here's a priest and there is a Quaker, —
Do the cat and dog agree?

Have they burned the stocks for oven-wood?

Have they cut down the gallows-tree?

160

"Would the old folk know their children?
Would they own the graceless town,
With never a ranter to worry
And never a witch to drown?"

165

Loud laughed the cobbler Keezar, Laughed like a school-boy gay; Tossing his arms above him, The lapstone rolled away.

It rolled down the rugged hillside,
It spun like a wheel bewitched,
It plunged through the leaning willows,
And into the river pitched.

170

There, in the deep, dark water,
The magic stone lies still,
Under the leaning willows
In the shadow of the hill.

175

But oft the idle fisher
Sits on the shadowy bank,
And his dreams make marvellous pictures
Where the wizard's lapstone sank.

180

198

And still, in the summer twilights,
When the river seems to run
Out from the inner glory,
Warm with the melted sun,

The weary mill-girl lingers
Beside the charméd stream
And the sky and the golden water
Shape and color her dream.

Fair wave the sunset gardens,
The rosy signals fly;
Her homestead beckons from the cloud,
And love goes sailing by!

BARCLAY OF URY.

[Among the earliest converts to the doctrines of Friends in Scotland was Barclay of Ury, an old and distinguished soldier, who had fought under Gustavus Adolphus in Germany. As a Quaker, he became the object of persecution and abuse at the hands of the magistrates and the populace. None bore the indignities of the mob with greater patience and nobleness of soul than this once proud gentleman and soldier. One of his friends, on an occasion of uncommon rudeness, lamented that he should be treated so harshly in his old age who had been so honored before. "I find more satisfaction," said Barclay, "as well as honor, in being thus insulted for my religious principles, than when, a few years ago, it was usual for the magistrates, as I passed the city of Aberdeen, to meet me on the road and conduct me to public entertainment in their hall, and then escort me out again, to gain my favor." — Whittier.]

Up the streets of Aberdeen,
By the kirk and college green,
Rode the Laird of Ury;
Close behind him, close beside,
Foul of mouth and evil-eyed,
Pressed the mob in fury.

Flouted him the drunken churl, Jeered at him the serving-girl, Prompt to please her master; And the begging carlin, late Fed and clothed at Ury's gate, Cursed him as he passed her.

16

25

Yet, with calm and stately mien,
Up the streets of Aberdeen
Came he slowly riding;
And, to all he saw and heard
Answering not with bitter word,
Turning not for chiding.

Came a troop with broadswords swinging,
Bits and bridles sharply ringing,
Loose and free and froward;
Quoth the foremost, "Ride him down!
Push him! prick him! through the town
Drive the Quaker coward!"

But from out the thickening crowd Cried a sudden voice and loud: "Barclay! Ho! a Barclay!" And the old man at his side Saw a comrade, battle tried, Scarred and sunburned darkly;

40

45

50

55

Who with ready weapon bare, Fronting to the troopers there, Cried aloud: "God save us, Call ye coward him who stood Ankle deep in Lützen's blood, With the brave Gustavus?"

"Nay, I do not need thy sword,
Comrade mine," said Ury's lord;
"Put it up, I pray thee:
Passive to His holy will,
Trust I in my Master still,
Even though He slay me.

"Pledges of thy love and faith,
Proved on many a field of death,
Not by me are needed."

Marvelled much that henchman bold,
That his laird, so stout of old,
Now so meekly pleaded.

"Woe's the day!" he sadly said,
With a slowly shaking head,
And a look of pity;
"Ury's honest lord reviled,
Mock of knave and sport of child,
In his own good city!

"Speak the word, and, master mine,
As we charged on Tilly's line,
And his Walloon lancers,

35. It was at Lützen, near Leipzig, that Gustavus Adolphus fell in 1632. He was the hero of Schiller's Wallenstein, which Carlyle calls "the greatest tragedy of the eighteenth century."

56. Count de Tilly was a fierce soldier under Wallenstein, who

Smiting through their midst we'll teach Civil look and decent speech To these boyish prancers!"

"Marvel not, mine ancient friend, Like beginning, like the end," Quoth the Laird of Ury; "Is the sinful servant more

"Is the sinful servant more
Than his gracious Lord who bore
Bonds and stripes in Jewry?

"Give me joy that in His name
I can bear, with patient frame,
All these vain ones offer;
While for them He suffereth long,
Shall I answer wrong with wrong,
Scoffing with the scoffer?

"Happier I, with loss of all,
Hunted, outlawed, held in thrall,
With few friends to greet me,
Than when reeve and squire were seen,
Riding out from Aberdeen,
With bared heads to meet me.

"When each goodwife, o'er and o'er,
Blessed me as I passed her door;
And the snooded daughter,
Through her casement glancing down,
Smiled on him who bore renown
From red fields of slaughter.

in the Thirty Years' War laid siege to Magdeburg, and after two years took it and displayed great barbarity toward the inhabitants. The phrase, "like old Tilly," is still heard sometimes in New England of any piece of special ferocity.

100

110

"Hard to feel the stranger's scoff,
Hard the old friend's falling off,
Hard to learn forgiving;
But the Lord His own rewards,
And His love with theirs accords,
Warm and fresh and living.

"Through this dark and stormy night
Faith beholds a feeble light
Up the blackness streaking;
Knowing God's own time is best,
In a patient hope I rest
For the full day-breaking!"

So the Laird of Ury said,
Turning slow his horse's head
Towards the Tolbooth prison,
Where, through iron grates, he heard
Poor disciples of the Word
Preach of Christ arisen!

Not in vain, Confessor old,
Unto us the tale is told
Of thy day of trial;
Every age on him who strays
From its broad and beaten ways
Pours its sevenfold vial.

Happy he whose inward ear
Angel comfortings can hear,
O'er the rabble's laughter;
And while Hatred's fagots burn,
Glimpses through the smoke discern
Of the good hereafter.

120

125

Knowing this, that never yet
Share of Truth was vainly set
In the world's wide fallow;
After hands shall sow the seed,
After hands from hill and mead
Reap the harvests yellow.

Thus, with somewhat of the Seer,
Must the moral pioneer
From the Future borrow;
Clothe the waste with dreams of grain,
And, on midnight's sky of rain,
Paint the golden morrow!

THE TWO RABBIS.

THE Rabbi Nathan, twoscore years and ten,
Walked blameless through the evil world, and then,
Just as the almond blossomed in his hair,
Met a temptation all too strong to bear,
And miserably sinned. So, adding not
Falsehood to guilt, he left his seat, and taught
No more among the elders, but went out
From the great congregation, girt about
With sackcloth, and with ashes on his head,
Making his gray locks grayer. Long he prayed,
Smiting his breast; then, as the Book he laid
Open before him for the Bath-Col's choice,

12. Daughter of the Voice is the meaning of Bath-Col, which was a sort of divination practised by the Jews when the gift of

Pausing to hear that Daughter of a Voice,
Behold the royal preacher's words: "A friend
Loveth at all times, yea, unto the end;
And for the evil day thy brother lives."
Marvelling, he said: "It is the Lord who gives Counsel in need. At Ecbatana dwells
Rabbi Ben Isaac, who all men excels
In righteousness and wisdom, as the trees
Of Lebanon the small weeds that the bees
Bow with their weight. I will arise, and lay
My sins before him."

And he went his way Barefooted, fasting long, with many prayers; But even as one who, followed unawares, 25 Suddenly in the darkness feels a hand Thrill with its touch his own, and his cheek fanned By odors subtly sweet, and whispers near Of words he loathes, yet cannot choose but hear, So, while the Rabbi journeyed, chanting low 30 The wail of David's penitential woe, Before him still the old temptation came. And mocked him with the motion and the shame Of such desires that, shuddering, he abhorred Himself; and, crying mightily to the Lord 35 To free his soul and cast the demon out. Smote with his staff the blankness round about.

At length, in the low light of a spent day, The towers of Ecbatana far away prophecy had died out. Something of the same sort of divination has been used amongst Christians when the Bible has been opened at hap-hazard and some answer expected to a question in the first passage that meets the eye. Rose on the desert's rim; and Nathan, faint 40 And footsore, pausing where for some dead saint The faith of Islam reared a doméd tomb. Saw some one kneeling in the shadow, whom He greeted kindly: "May the Holy One Answer thy prayers, O stranger!" Whereupon 45 The shape stood up with a loud cry, and then, Clasped in each other's arms, the two gray men Wept, praising Him whose gracious providence Made their paths one. But straightway, as the sense Of his transgression smote him, Nathan tore 50 Himself away: "O friend beloved, no more Worthy am I to touch thee, for I came, Foul from my sins, to tell thee all my shame. Haply thy prayers, since naught availeth mine, May purge my soul, and make it white like thine. Pity me, O Ben Isaac, I have sinned!"

Awestruck Ben Isaac stood. The desert wind
Blew his long mantle backward, laying bare
The mournful secret of his shirt of hair.
"I too, O friend, if not in act," he said,
"In thought have verily sinned. Hast thou not read,

Better the eye should see than that desire Should wander'? Burning with a hidden fire That tears and prayers quench not, I come to thee For pity and for help, as thou to me. Pray for me, O my friend!" But Nathan cried "Pray thou for me, Ben Isaac!"

Side by side

In the low sunshine by the turban stone

59. Which he wore as a mortification of the flesh.

They knelt; each made his brother's woe his own,
Forgetting, in the agony and stress
Of pitying love, his claim of selfishness;
Peace, for his friend besought, his own became;
His prayers were answered in another's name;
And, when at last they rose up to embrace,
Each saw God's pardon in his brother's face!
75

Long after, when his headstone gathered moss,
Traced on the targum-marge of Onkelos
In Rabbi Nathan's hand these words we read:
"Hope not the cure of sin till Self is dead;
Forget it in love's service, and the debt
Thou canst not pay the angels shall forget;
Heaven's gate is shut to him who comes alone;
Save thou a soul, and it shall save thy own!"

THE GIFT OF TRITEMIUS.

TRITEMIUS of Herbipolis, one day,
While kneeling at the altar's foot to pray,
Alone with God, as was his pious choice,
Heard from without a miserable voice,
A sound which seemed of all sad things to tell,
As of a lost soul crying out of hell.

Thereat the Abbot paused: the chain whereby His thoughts went upward broken by that cry;

77. The targum was a paraphrase of some portion of Scripture, n the Chaldee language. It was on the margin of the most ancient targum — that of Onkelos — that Rabbi Nathan wrote his words.

30

35

And, looking from the casement, saw below
A wretched woman, with gray hair aflow,
And withered hands held up to him, who cried
For alms as one who might not be denied.

She cried, "For the dear love of Him who gave
His life for ours, my child from bondage save, —
My beautiful, brave first-born, chained with slaves
In the Moor's galley, where the sun-smit waves
Lap the white walls of Tunis!"—"What I can
I give," Tritemius said: "my prayers."—"O man

Of God!" she cried, for grief had made her bold, "Mock me not thus; I ask not prayers, but gold. Words will not serve me, alms alone suffice; Even while I speak perchance my first-born dies."

"Woman!" Tritemius answered, "from our door None go unfed; hence are we always poor: A single soldo is our only store.

Thou hast our prayers; — what can we give thee more?"

"Give me," she said, "the silver candlesticks On either side of the great crucifix. God well may spare them on His errands sped, Or He can give you golden ones instead."

Then spake Tritemius, "Even as thy word, Woman, so be it! (Our most gracious Lord, Who loveth mercy more than sacrifice, Pardon me if a human soul I prize Above the gifts upon His altar piled!) Take what thou askest, and redeem thy child."

But his hand trembled as the holy alms
He placed within the beggar's eager palms;
And as she vanished down the linden shade,
He bowed his head and for forgiveness prayed.

So the day passed, and when the twilight came He woke to find the chapel all aflame, And, dumb with grateful wonder, to behold Upon the altar candlesticks of gold.

THE BROTHER OF MERCY.

PIERO LUCA, known of all the town As the gray porter by the Pitti wall Where the noon shadows of the gardens fall, Sick and in dolor, waited to lay down His last sad burden, and beside his mat The barefoot monk of La Certosa sat.

Unseen, in square and blossoming garden drifted,
Soft sunset lights through green Val d'Arno sifted;
Unheard, below the living shuttles shifted
Backward and forth, and wove, in love or strife,
In mirth or pain, the mottled web of life:
But when at last came upward from the street
Tinkle of bell and tread of measured feet,
The sick man started, strove to rise in vain,
Sinking back heavily with a moan of pain.

6. The monastery of La Certosa is about four miles distant from Florence, the scene of this little poem.

8. The Val d'Arno is the valley of the river Arno, upon which Florence lies.

And the monk said, "'T is but the Brotherhood Of Mercy going on some errand good: Their black masks by the palace-wall I see." Piero answered faintly, "Woe is me! This day for the first time in forty years 28 In vain the bell hath sounded in my ears, Calling me with my brethren of the mask. Beggar and prince alike, to some new task Of love or pity, - haply from the street To bear a wretch plague-stricken, or, with feet Hushed to the quickened ear and feverish brain, To tread the crowded lazaretto's floors. Down the long twilight of the corridors, Midst tossing arms and faces full of pain. I loved the work: it was its own reward. 36 I never counted on it to offset My sins, which are many, or make less my debt To the free grace and mercy of our Lord; But somehow, father, it has come to be In these long years so much a part of me, 35 I should not know myself, if lacking it, But with the work the worker too would die, And in my place some other self would sit

16. The Brethren of the Misericordia, an association which had its origin in the thirteenth century, is composed mainly of the wealthy and prosperous, whose duty it is to nurse the sick, to aid those who have been injured by accident, and to secure decent burial to the poor and friendless. They are summoned by the sound of a bell, and, when it is heard, the member slips away from ball-room, or dinner party, or wherever he may be; puts on the black robe and hood, entirely concealing his face,—slit openings being provided for the eyes,—and performs the duty assigned to him. This thorough concealment is to aid in securing the perfect equality enjoined by the Order.

Joyful or sad, — what matters, if not I? And now all 's over. Woe is me!"

"My son," The monk said soothingly, "thy work is done; And no more as a servant, but the guest Of God thou enterest thy eternal rest. No toil, no tears, no sorrow for the lost Shall mar thy perfect bliss. Thou shalt sit down Clad in white robes, and wear a golden crown Forever and forever." - Piero tossed On his sick-pillow: "Miserable me! I am too poor for such grand company; The crown would be too heavy for this gray 50 Old head; and God forgive me if I say It would be hard to sit there night and day, Like an image in the Tribune, doing naught With these hard hands, that all my life have wrought, Not for bread only, but for pity's sake. I 'm dull at prayers: I could not keep awake, Counting my beads. Mine 's but a crazy head, Scarce worth the saving, if all else be dead And if one goes to heaven without a heart, God knows he leaves behind his better part. 60 I love my fellow-men: the worst I know I would do good to. Will death change me so That I shall sit among the lazy saints, Turning a deaf ear to the sore complaints Of souls that suffer? Why, I never yet 65 Left a poor dog in the strada hard beset,

^{53.} The Tribune is a hall in the Uffizi Palace in Florence, where are assembled some of the most world-renowned statues, including the Venus de' Medici.

^{66.} Strada, street.

Or ass o'erladen! Must I rate man less
Than dog or ass, in holy selfishness?
Methinks (Lord, pardon, if the thought be sin!)
The world of pain were better, if therein
One's heart might still be human, and desires
Of natural pity drop upon its fires
Some cooling tears."

Thereat the pale monk crossed His brow, and, muttering, "Madman! thou art lost!" Took up his pyx and fled; and left alone, 75 The sick man closed his eyes with a great groan That sank into a prayer, "Thy will be done!"

Then was he made aware, by soul or ear,
Of somewhat pure and holy bending o'er him,
And of a voice like that of her who bore him,
Tender and most compassionate: "Never fear!
For heaven is love, as God himself is love;
Thy work below shall be thy work above."
And when he looked, lo! in the stern monk's place
He saw the shining of an angel's face!

The Traveller broke the pause. "I've seen
The Brothers down the long street steal,
Black, silent, masked, the crowd between,
And felt to doff my hat and kneel
With heart, if not with knee, in prayer,
For blessings on their pious care."

86. The poem of The Brother of Mercy forms a part of The Tent on the Beach, in which Whittier pictures himself, the Traveller (Bayard Taylor), and the Man of Books (J. T. Fields), camping upon Salisbury beach and telling stories.

THE PROPHECY OF SAMUEL SEWALL.

[SAMUEL SEWALL was one of a family notable in New England annals, and himself an eminent man in his generation. He was born in England in 1652, and was brought by his father to this country in 1661; but his father and grandfather were both pioneers in New England, and the family home was in Newbury, Massachusetts. Here Sewall spent his boyhood, but after graduating at Harvard he first essayed preaching, and then entered upon secular pursuits, becoming a member of the government and finally chief justice. He presided at the sad trial of witches, and afterward made public confession of his error in a noble paper which was read in church before the congregation and assented to by the judge, who stood alone as it was read and bowed at its conclusion. The paper is preserved in the first volume of the Diary of Samuel Sewall, published by the Massachusetts Historical Society. He was an upright man, of tender conscience and reverent mind. His character is well drawn by the poet in lines 13-20.

UP and down the village streets Strange are the forms my fancy meets, For the thoughts and things of to-day are hid, And through the veil of a closéd lid The ancient worthies I see again: I hear the tap of the elder's cane, And his awful periwig I see, And the silver buckles of shoe and knee. Stately and slow, with thoughtful air, His black cap hiding his whitened hair, 10 Walks the Judge of the great Assize, Samuel Sewall the good and wise. His face with lines of firmness wrought,

He wears the look of a man unbought, Who swears to his hurt and changes not; Yet, touched and softened nevertheless, With the grace of Christian gentleness, The face that a child would climb to kiss! True and tender and brave and just, That man might honor and woman trust.

Touching and sad, a tale is told,

Like a penitent hymn of the Psalmist old,

Of the fast which the good man lifelong kept

With a haunting sorrow that never slept,

As the circling year brought round the time

Of an error that left the sting of crime,

When he sat on the bench of the witchcraft courts

With the laws of Moses and Hale's Reports,

And spake, in the name of both, the word

That gave the witch's neck to the cord,

And piled the oaken planks that pressed

15. See Psalm xv. 4.

23. It was the custom in Sewall's time for churches and individuals to hold fasts whenever any public or private need suggested the fitness; and as state and church were very closely connected, the General Court sometimes ordered a fast; out of this custom sprang the annual fast in spring, now observed, but it is of comparatively recent date. Such a fast was ordered on the 14th of January, 1697, when Sewall made his special confession. He is said to have observed the day privately on each annual return thereafter. The custom still holds for churches to appoint their own fasts.

28. Sir Matthew Hale, the great English judge, was a devout believer in the existence of witchcraft, and in 1645 a great number of trials were held before him. The reports of those trials furnished precedents for Sewall and his court, not unassisted by the records in the Old Testament.

The feeble life from the warlock's breast! All the day long, from dawn to dawn, His door was bolted, his curtain drawn; No foot on his silent threshold trod. No eve looked on him save that of God. As he baffled the ghosts of the dead with charms Of penitent tears, and prayers, and psalms, And, with precious proofs from the sacred word Of the boundless pity and love of the Lord. His faith confirmed and his trust renewed That the sin of his ignorance, sorely rued, Might be washed away in the mingled flood Of his human sorrow and Christ's dear blood!

Green forever the memory be 45 Of the Judge of the old Theocracy, Whom even his errors glorified, Like a far-seen, sunlit mountain-side By the cloudy shadows which o'er it glide! Honor and praise to the Puritan 50 Who the halting step of his age outran. And, seeing the infinite worth of man In the priceless gift the Father gave, In the infinite love that stooped to save. Dared not brand his brother a slave! 55 "Who doth such wrong," he was wont to say, In his own quaint, picture-loving way,

55. In 1700 Sewall wrote a little tract of three pages on The Selling of Joseph, which has been characterized as "an acute, compact, powerful statement of the case against American slavery, leaving, indeed, almost nothing new to be said a century and a half afterward, when the sad thing came up for final adjustment." Reprinted in Mass. Hist. Society's Proceedings for 1863-1864, pp. 161-165.

"Flings up to Heaven a hand-grenade Which God shall cast down upon his head!"

Widely as heaven and hell, contrast That brave old jurist of the past And the cunning trickster and knave of courts Who the holy features of Truth distorts, -Ruling as right the will of the strong, Poverty, crime, and weakness wrong; Wide-eared to power, to the wronged and weak Deaf as Egypt's gods of leek; Scoffing aside at party's nod Order of nature and law of God: For whose dabbled ermine respect were waste, Reverence folly, and awe misplaced; Justice of whom 't were vain to seek As from Koordish robber or Syrian Sheik. Oh, leave the wretch to his bribes and sins; Let him rot in the web of lies he spins! To the saintly soul of the early day, To the Christian judge, let us turn and say: "Praise and thanks for an honest man! — Glory to God for the Puritan!"

I see, far southward, this quiet day,
The hills of Newbury rolling away,
With the many tints of the season gay,
Dreamily blending in autumn mist
Crimson, and gold, and amethyst.
Long and low, with dwarf trees crowned,

67. There was an early belief that the Egyptians worshipped gods of leek, but it has been shown that the belief rose from certain restrictions in the use of onions laid upon the priests, and from the offering of them as a part of sacrifice.

Plum Island lies, like a whale aground. A stone's toss over the narrow sound. Inland, as far as the eve can go, The hills curve round like a bended bow: A silver arrow from out them sprung, 90 I see the shine of the Quasycung; And, round and round, over valley and hill, Old roads winding, as old roads will, Here to a ferry, and there to a mill; And glimpses of chimneys and gabled eaves, 95 Through green elm arches and maple leaves, — Old homesteads sacred to all that can Gladden or sadden the heart of man. — Over whose threshold of oak and stone Life and Death have come and gone! 100 There pictured tiles in the fireplace show, Great beams sag from the ceiling low, The dresser glitters with polished wares, The long clock ticks on the foot-worn stairs, And the low, broad chimney shows the crack 105 By the earthquake made a century back. Up from their midst springs the village spire With the crest of its cock in the sun afire; Beyond are orchards and planting lands, And great salt marshes and glimmering sands, 110 And, where north and south the coastlines run, The blink of the sea in breeze and sun!

I see it all like a chart unrolled, But my thoughts are full of the past and old, I hear the tales of my boyhood told; And the shadows and shapes of early days Flit dimly by in the veiling haze, With measured movement and rhythmic chime

Weaving like shuttles my web of rhyme.

I think of the old man wise and good
Who once on you misty hillsides stood,
(A poet who never measured rhyme,
A seer unknown to his dull-eared time,)
And, propped on his staff of age, looked down,
With his boyhood's love, on his native town,
Where, written, as if on its hills and plains,
His burden of prophecy yet remains,
For the voices of wood, and wave, and wind
To read in the ear of the musing mind:—

"As long as Plum Island, to guard the coast As God appointed, shall keep its post; As long as salmon shall haunt the deep Of Merrimack River, or sturgeon leap; As long as pickerel swift and slim, Or red-backed perch, in Crane Pond swim; As long as the annual sea-fowl know Their time to come and their time to go; As long as cattle shall roam at will The green, grass meadows by Turkey Hill; As long as sheep shall look from the side Of Oldtown Hill on marishes wide, And Parker River, and salt-sea tide: As long as a wandering pigeon shall search The fields below from his white-oak perch. When the barley-harvest is ripe and shorn,

124. As a matter of fact Sewall was forty-five years old when he uttered his prophecy.

130. This prophecy in very rhythmic prose was first published in Sewall's Phænomena Quædam Apocalyptica. It will be found in Coffin's History of Newburyport, and in The Bodleys on Wheels, pp. 207, 208.

And the dry husks fall from the standing corn;
As long as Nature shall not grow old,
Nor drop her work from her doting hold,
And her care for the Indian corn forget,
And the yellow rows in pairs to set;
So long shall Christians here be born,
Grow up and ripen as God's sweet corn!

By the beak of bird, by the breath of frost,
Shall never a holy ear be lost,
But, husked by Death in the Planter's sight,
Be sown again in the fields of light!"

The Island still is purple with plums,
Up the river the salmon comes,
The sturgeon leaps, and the wild-fowl feeds
On hillside berries and marish seeds,—
All the beautiful signs remain,
From spring-time sowing to autumn rain
The good man's vision returns again!
And let us hope, as well we can,
That the Silent Angel who garners man
May find some grain as of old he found
In the human cornfield ripe and sound,
And the Lord of the Harvest deign to own
The precious seed by the fathers sown!

MAUD MULLER.

MAUD MULLER, on a summer's day, Raked the meadow sweet with hay.

Beneath her torn hat glowed the wealth Of simple beauty and rustic health.

Singing, she wrought, and her merry glee The mock-bird echoed from his tree.

But when she glanced to the far-off town, White from its hill-slope looking down,

The sweet song died, and a vague unrest And a nameless longing filled her breast,—

10

15

26

25

A wish, that she hardly dared to own, For something better than she had known.

The Judge rode slowly down the lane, Smoothing his horse's chestnut mane.

He drew his bridle in the shade Of the apple-trees, to greet the maid,

And asked a draught from the spring that flowed Through the meadow across the road.

She stooped where the cool spring bubbled up, And filled for him her small tin cup,

And blushed as she gave it, looking down On her feet so bare, and her tattered gown.

"Thanks!" said the Judge; "a sweeter draught From a fairer hand was never quaffed."

He spoke of the grass and flowers and trees, Of the singing birds and the humming bees;

Then talked of the haying, and wondered whether The cloud in the west would bring foul weather. And Maud forgot her brier-torn gown, And her graceful ankles bare and brown;

20

45

50

And listened, while a pleased surprise Looked from her long-lashed hazel eyes.

At last, like one who for delay Seeks a vain excuse, he rode away.

Maud Muller looked and sighed: "Ah me! That I the Judge's bride might be!

- "He would dress me up in silks so fine, And praise and toast me at his wine.
- "My father should wear a broadcloth coat; My brother should sail a painted boat.
- "I'd dress my mother so grand and gay,
 And the baby should have a new toy each day.
- "And I'd feed the hungry and clothe the poor,
 And all should bless me who left our door."
 - The Judge looked back as he climbed the hill, And saw Maud Muller standing still.
- "A form more fair, a face more sweet, Ne'er hath it been my lot to meet.
- "And her modest answer and graceful air Show her wise and good as she is fair.
- "Would she were mine, and I to-day, Like her, a harvester of hay;

65

70

75

- "No doubtful balance of rights and wrongs, Nor weary lawyers with endless tongues,
- "But low of cattle and song of birds,
 And health and quiet and loving words."

But he thought of his sisters, proud and cold, And his mother, vain of her rank and gold.

So, closing his heart, the Judge rode on, And Maud was left in the field alone.

But the lawyers smiled that afternoon, When he hummed in court an old love-tune;

And the young girl mused beside the well Till the rain on the unraked clover fell.

He wedded a wife of richest dower, Who lived for fashion, as he for power.

Yet oft, in his marble hearth's bright glow, He watched a picture come and go;

And sweet Maud Muller's hazel eyes Looked out in their innocent surprise.

Oft, when the wine in his glass was red, He longed for the wayside well instead;

And closed his eyes on his garnished rooms. To dream of meadows and clover-blooms.

And the proud man sighed, with a secret pain, 64 Ah, that I were free again!

90

95

100

"Free as when I rode that day, Where the barefoot maiden raked her hay."

She wedded a man unlearned and poor, And many children played round her door.

But care and sorrow, and childbirth pain, Left their traces on heart and brain.

And oft, when the summer sun shone hot On the new-mown hay in the meadow lot,

And she heard the little spring brook fall Over the roadside, through the wall,

In the shade of the apple-tree again She saw a rider draw his rein.

And, gazing down with timid grace, She felt his pleased eyes read her face.

Sometimes her narrow kitchen walls Stretched away into stately halls;

The weary wheel to a spinnet turned, The tallow candle an astral burned,

And for him who sat by the chimney lug, Dozing and grumbling o'er pipe and mug,

A manly form at her side she saw, And joy was duty and love was law.

Then she took up her burden of life again, Saying only, "It might have been."

Alas for maiden, alas for Judge, For rich repiner and household drudge!

God pity them both! and pity us all, Who vainly the dreams of youth recall.

For of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: "It might have been!"

Ah, well! for us all some sweet hope lies Deeply buried from human eyes;

And, in the hereafter, angels may Roll the stone from its grave away!

106. The exigencies of rhyme have a heavy burden to bear in this line.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT was born at Cummington. Massachusetts, November 3, 1794; he died in New York, June 12, 1878. His first poem, The Embargo, was published in Boston in 1809, and was written when he was but thirteen years old; his last poem, Our Fellow Worshippers_ was published in 1878. His long life thus was a long career as a writer, and his first published poem prefigured the twofold character of his literary life, for while it was in poetic form it was more distinctly a political article. He showed very early a taste for poetry, and was encouraged to read and write verse by his father, Dr. Peter Bryant, a country physician of strong character and cultivated tastes. He was sent to Williams College in the fall of 1810, where he remained two terms, when he decided to leave and enter Yale College; but pecuniary troubles interfered with his plans, and he never completed his college course. He pursued his literary studies at home, then began the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1815. Meantime he had been continuing to write, and during this period wrote with many corrections and changes the poem by which he is still perhaps best known, Thanatopsis. It was published in the North American Review for September, 1817, and the same periodical published a few months afterward his lines To a Waterfowl, one of the most characteristic and lovely of Bryant's poems. Literature divided his attention with law, but evidently had his heart. In 1821 he was invited to read a poem before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard College, and he read The Ages, a grave stately poem which shows his own poetic power, his familiarity with the great masters of literature, and his lofty, philosophic nature. Shortly after this he issued a small volume of poems, and his name began to be known as that of the first American who had written poetry that could take its place in universal literature. His own decided preference for literature, and the encouragement of friends, led to his abandonment of the law in 1825, and his removal to New York, where he undertook the associate editorship of The New York Review and Athenœum Magazine. Poetic genius is not caused or controlled by circumstance, but a purely literary life in a country not yet educated in literature was impossible to a man of no other means of support, and in a few months, after the Review had vainly tried to maintain life by a frequent change of name, Bryant accepted an appointment as assistant editor of the Evening Post. From 1826, then, until his death, Bryant was a journalist by profession. One effect of this change in his life was to eliminate from his poetry that political character which was displayed in his first published poem and had several times since shown itself. Thenceafter he threw into his journalistic occupation all those thoughts and experiences which made him by nature a patriot and political thinker; he reserved for poetry the calm reflection, love of nature, and purity of aspiration which made him a poet. His editorial writing was made strong and pure by his cultivated taste and lofty ideals, but he presented the rare combination of a poet who never sacrificed his love of high literature and his devotion to art, and of a publicist who retained a sound judgment and pursued the most practical ends.

His life outwardly was uneventful. He made four jour neys to Europe, in 1834, 1845, 1852, 1857, and he made frequent tours in his own country. His observations on his travels were published in Letters from a Traveller, Letters from the East, and Letters from Spain and other Countries. He never held public office, except that in 1860 he was a presidential elector, but he was connected intimately with important movements in society, literature, and politics, and was repeatedly called upon to deliver addresses commemorative of eminent citizens, as of Washington Irving, and James Fenimore Cooper, and at the unveiling of the bust of Mazzini in the Central Park. His Orations and Addresses have been gathered into a volume.

The bulk of his poetry apart from his poetic translations is not considerable, and is made up almost wholly of short poems which are chiefly inspired by his love of nature. R. H. Dana in his preface to The Idle Man says: "I shall never forget with what feeling my friend Bryant some years ago 'described to me the effect produced upon him by his meeting for the first time with Wordsworth's Ballads. He lived, when quite young, where but few works of poetry were to be had; at a period, too, when Pope was still the great idol of the Temple of Art. He said that upon opening Wordsworth a thousand springs seemed to gush up at once in his heart, and the face of nature of a sudden to change into a strange freshness and life."

This was the interpreting power of Wordsworth suddenly disclosing to Bryant, not the secrets of nature, but his own powers of perception and interpretation. Bryant is in no sense an imitator of Wordsworth, but a comparison of the two poets would be of great interest as showing how individually each pursued the same general poetic end. Wordsworth's Three Years She Grew in Sun and Shower and Bryant's O Fairest of the Rural Maids offer an admirable opportunity for disclosing the separate treatment of similar subjects. In Bryant's lines, musical and full of a gentle revery, the poet seems to go deeper and deeper into the forest, almost forgetful of the "fairest of the rural maids;" in Wordsworth's lines, with what simple yet profound feeling the poet, after delicately disclosing the interchange of nature and human life, returns into those depths of human sympathy where nature must forever remain as a remote shadow.

Bryant translated many short poems from the Spanish, but his largest literary undertaking was the translation of the Iliad and Odyssey of Homer. He brought to this task great requisite powers, and if there is any failure it is in the absence of Homer's lightness and rapidity, qualities which the elasticity of the Greek language especially favored.

A pleasant touch of a simple humor appeared in some of his social addresses, and occasionally is found in his poems, as in Robert of Lincoln. Suggestions of personal experience will be read in such poems as The Cloud on the Way, The Life that Is, and in the half-autobiographic poem, A Lifetime.

SELLA.

[Sella is the name given by the Vulgate to one of the wives of Lamech, mentioned in the fourth chapter of the Book of Genesis, and called Zillah in the common English version of the Bible. The meaning of the name is Shadow, and in choosing it the poet seems to have had no reference to the Biblical fact, but to the significance of the name, since he was telling of a creature who had the form without the substance of human kind. The story naturally suggests Fouqué's Undine, and is in some respects a complement to that levely romance. Undine is a water-nymph without a soul, who gains one only by marrying a human being, and in marrying tastes of the sorrows of life. Sella is of the human race, gifted with a soul, but having a longing for life among the water-nymphs. That life withdraws her from the troubles and cares of the world, and she loses more and more her interest in them; when at last she is rudely cut off from sharing in the water-nymphs' life, is awakened as it were from a dream of beauty, she returns to the world after a brief struggle, mingles with it, and makes the knowledge gained among the water-nymphs minister to the needs of men.

The story must not be probed too ingeniously for its moral; it is an exquisite fairy tale, but like many of such tales it involves a gentle parable, which has been hinted at above. If a more explicit interpretation is desired, we may say that the passion for ideals, gradually withdrawing one from human sympathy, is made finally to ennoble and lift real life. The poet has not localized the poem nor given it a specific time, but left himself and the reader free by using the large terms of nature and human life, and referring the action to the early, formative period of the world. Observe Bryant's delicate and accurate transcriptions of faint characteristics of nature, as in lines 8, 12, 30, 35, 41, 215, 238, 389.]

HEAR now a legend of the days of old — The days when there were goodly marvels yet, When man to man gave willing faith, and loved A tale the better that 't was wild and strange.

Beside a pleasant dwelling ran a brook
Scudding along a narrow channel, paved
With green and yellow pebbles; yet full clear
Its waters were, and colorless and cool,
As fresh from granite rocks. A maiden oft
Stood at the open window, leaning out,
And listening to the sound the water made,
A sweet, eternal murmur, still the same,
And not the same; and oft, as spring came on,
She gathered violets from its fresh moist bank,
To place within her bower, and when the herbs
Of summer drooped beneath the mid-day sun,
She sat within the shade of a great rock,
Dreamily listening to the streamlet's song.

19

15

25

Ripe were the maiden's years; her stature showed Womanly beauty, and her clear, calm eye Was bright with venturous spirit, yet her face Was passionless, like those by sculptor graved For niches in a temple. Lovers oft Had wooed her, but she only laughed at love, And wondered at the silly things they said. "T was her delight to wander where wild vines O'erhang the river's brim, to climb the path

11. Observe the various suggestions in the early lines of the poem of Sella's sympathy with water life.

Of woodland streamlet to its mountain springs, To sit by gleaming wells and mark below The image of the rushes on its edge, And, deep beyond, the trailing clouds that slid Across the fair blue space. No little fount Stole forth from hanging rock, or in the side Of hollow dell, or under roots of oak, No rill came trickling, with a stripe of green, Down the bare hill, that to this maiden's eves Was not familiar. Often did the banks Of river or of sylvan lakelet hear The dip of oars with which the maiden rowed Her shallop, pushing ever from the prow

SELLA.

A crowd of long, light ripples toward the shore. Two brothers had the maiden, and she thought, Within herself: "I would I were like them; For then I might go forth alone, to trace The mighty rivers downward to the sea, And upward to the brooks that, through the year, Prattle to the cool valleys. I would know What races drink their waters; how their chiefs Bear rule, and how men worship there, and how They build, and to what quaint device they frame, 50 Where sea and river meet, their stately ships; What flowers are in their gardens, and what trees Bear fruit within their orchards; in what garb Their bowmen meet on holidays, and how Their maidens bind the waist and braid the hair. Here, on these hills, my father's house o'erlooks

31. The clouds which she sees deep beyond are of course the reflection of the clouds passing over the well, as it is not the rushes but the image of the rushes which she sees in the water.

Broad pastures grazed by flocks and herds, but there I hear they sprinkle the great plains with corn

And watch its springing up, and when the green Is changed to gold, they cut the stems and bring The harvest in, and give the nations bread. And there they hew the quarry into shafts, And pile up glorious temples from the rock, And chisel the rude stones to shapes of men. All this I pine to see, and would have seen, But that I am a woman, long ago."

Thus in her wanderings did the maiden dream. Until, at length, one morn in early spring, When all the glistening fields lay white with frost, She came half breathless where her mother sat: 70 "See, mother dear," said she, "what I have found, Upon our rivulet's bank; two slippers, white As the mid-winter snow, and spangled o'er With twinkling points, like stars, and on the edge My name is wrought in silver; read, I pray, 75 Sella, the name thy mother, now in heaven, Gave at my birth; and sure, they fit my feet!" "A dainty pair," the prudent matron said, "But thine they are not. We must lay them by For those whose careless hands have left them here; 80 Or haply they were placed beside the brook To be a snare. I cannot see thy name

72. The reader will recall instances of the magical or transforming character of slippers and the like: Mercury with his winged sandals, Cinderella with her glass slippers, the seven leagued boots, Puss in boots. A covering for the head is connected with the power of command and the power of invisibility: a covering for the foot with magical power of motion.

82. In the mother's inability to read Sella's name on the slipper is suggested that unimaginative nature which is so often represented in fairy tales for a foil to the imagination. Hawthorue has used this open-eyed blindness with excellent effect in his story of the Snow Image. SELLA. 291

Upon the border, — only characters
Of mystic look and dim are there, like signs
Of some strange art; nay, daughter, wear them not."

Then Sella hung the slippers in the porch Of that broad rustic lodge, and all who passed Admired their fair contexture, but none knew Who left them by the brook. And now, at length. May, with her flowers and singing birds, had gone, And on bright streams and into deep wells shone The high, mid-summer sun. One day, at noon, Sella was missed from the accustomed meal. They sought her in her favorite haunts, they looked By the great rock, and far along the stream, And shouted in the sounding woods her name. Night came, and forth the sorrowing household went With torches over the wide pasture-grounds To pool and thicket, marsh and briery dell, And solitary valley far away. 100 The morning came, and Sella was not found. The sun climbed high; they sought her still; the noon.

The hot and silent noon, heard Sella's name,
Uttered with a despairing cry, to wastes
O'er which the eagle hovered. As the sun
Stooped toward the amber west to bring the close
Of that sad second day, and, with red eyes,
The mother sat within her home alone,
Sella was at her side. A shriek of joy
Broke the sad silence; glad, warm tears were shed, 110
And words of gladness uttered. "Oh, forgive,"
The maiden said, "that I could e'er forget
Thy wishes for a moment. I just tried
The slippers on, amazed to see them shaped

So fairly to my feet, when, all at once, 115 I felt my steps upborne and hurried on Almost as if with wings. A strange delight, Blent with a thrill of fear, o'ermastered me, And, ere I knew, my plashing steps were set Within the rivulet's pebbly bed, and I 120 Was rushing down the current. By my side Tripped one as beautiful as ever looked From white clouds in a dream: and, as we ran, She talked with musical voice and sweetly laughed. Gavly we leaped the crag and swam the pool. 125 And swept with dimpling eddies round the rock, And glided between shady meadow banks. The streamlet, broadening as we went, became A swelling river, and we shot along By stately towns, and under leaning masts 130 Of gallant barks, nor lingered by the shore Of blooming gardens; onward, onward still, The same strong impulse bore me till, at last, We entered the great deep, and passed below His billows, into boundless spaces, lit 135 With a green sunshine. Here were mighty groves Far down the ocean valleys, and between Lay what might seem fair meadows, softly tinged With orange and with crimson. Here arose Tall stems, that, rooted in the depths below, 140 Swung idly with the motions of the sea; And here were shrubberies in whose mazy screen The creatures of the deep made haunt. My friend Named the strange growths, the pretty coralline, The dulse with crimson leaves, and streaming far, 145 Sea-thong and sea-lace. Here the tangle spread Its broad, thick fronds, with pleasant bowers beneath; And oft we trod a waste of pearly sands,

SELLA. 293

Spotted with rosy shells, and thence looked in At caverns of the sea whose rock-roofed halls 150 Lay in blue twilight. As we moved along. The dwellers of the deep, in mighty herds, Passed by us, reverently they passed us by, Long trains of dolphins rolling through the brine, Huge whales, that drew the waters after them, 155 A torrent stream, and hideous hammer-sharks. Chasing their prey. I shuddered as they came; Gently they turned aside and gave us room." Hereat broke in the mother, "Sella, dear, This is a dream, the idlest, vainest dream." 160 "Nay, mother, nay; behold this sea-green scarf, Woven of such threads as never human hand Twined from the distaff. She who led my way Through the great waters bade me wear it home, A token that my tale is true. 'And keep,' 165 She said, 'the slippers thou hast found, for thou, When shod with them, shalt be like one of us, With power to walk at will the ocean-floor, Among its monstrous creatures, unafraid, And feel no longing for the air of heaven 170 To fill thy lungs, and send the warm, red blood Along thy veins. But thou shalt pass the hours In dances with the sea-nymphs, or go forth, To look into the mysteries of the abyss Where never plummet reached. And thou shalt sleep Thy weariness away on downy banks 176 Of sea-moss, where the pulses of the tide Shall gently lift thy hair, or thou shalt float On the soft currents that go forth and wind From isle to isle, and wander through the sea.' 180

"So spake my fellow-voyager, her words Sounding like wavelets on a summer shore, And then we stopped beside a hanging rock
With a smooth beach of white sands at its foot,
Where three fair creatures like herself were set
At their sea-banquet, crisp and juicy stalks,
Culled from the ocean's meadows, and the sweet
Midrib of pleasant leaves, and golden fruits,
Dropped from the trees that edge the southern isles,
And gathered on the waves. Kindly they prayed
That I would share their meal, and I partook
With eager appetite, for long had been
My journey, and I left the spot refreshed.

"And then we wandered off amid the groves
Of coral loftier than the growths of earth;
The mightiest cedar lifts no trunk like theirs,
So huge, so high, toward heaven, nor overhangs
Alleys and bowers so dim. We moved between
Pinnacles of black rock, which, from beneath,
Molten by inner fires, so said my guide,
Gushed long ago into the hissing brine,
That quenched and hardened them, and now they stand

Motionless in the currents of the sea
That part and flow around them. As we went,
We looked into the hollows of the abyss,
To which the never-resting waters sweep
The skeletons of sharks, the long white spines
Of narwhale and of dolphin, bones of men
Shipwrecked, and mighty ribs of foundered barks.
Down the blue pits we looked, and hastened on.

205

216

"But beautiful the fountains of the sea Sprang upward from its bed; the silvery jets Shot branching far into the azure brine, And where they mingled with it, the great deep Quivered and shook, as shakes the glimmering air Above a furnace. So we wandered through
The mighty world of waters, till at length
I wearied of its wonders, and my heart
Began to yearn for my dear mountain home.
I prayed my gentle guide to lead me back
To the upper air. 'A glorious realm,' I said,
'Is this thou openest to me; but I stray
Bewildered in its vastness; these strange sights
And this strange light oppress me. I must see
The faces that I love, or I shall die.'

"She took my hand, and, darting through the waves,

Brought me to where the stream, by which we came, Rushed into the main ocean. Then began A slower journey upward. Wearily We breasted the strong current, climbing through The rapids tossing high their foam. The night Came down, and, in the clear depth of a pool, Edged with o'erhanging rock, we took our rest Till morning; and I slept, and dreamed of home And thee. A pleasant sight the morning showed; 235 The green fields of this upper world, the herds That grazed the bank, the light on the red clouds, The trees, with all their host of trembling leaves, Lifting and lowering to the restless wind Their branches. As I awoke I saw them all From the clear stream; yet strangely was my heart Parted between the watery world and this, And as we journeyed upward, oft I thought Of marvels I had seen, and stopped and turned,

224. How very often in fairy tales the human being has but to exercise the will to attain or to renounce the fairy power! It is only when one is under a spell, in the classic fairy tales, that the will is not recognized as the supreme authority.

And lingered, till I thought of thee again;
And then again I turned and clambered up
The rivulet's murmuring path, until we came
Beside this cottage door. There tenderly
My fair conductor kissed me, and I saw
Her face no more. I took the slippers off.
Oh! with what deep delight my lungs drew in
The air of heaven again, and with what joy
I felt my blood bound with its former glow;
And now I never leave thy side again."

So spoke the maiden Sella, with large tears
Standing in her mild eyes, and in the porch
Replaced the slippers. Autumn came and went;
The winter passed; another summer warmed
The quiet pools; another autumn tinged
The grape with red, yet while it hung unplucked,
The mother ere her time was carried forth
To sleep among the solitary hills.

A long still sadness settled on that home
Among the mountains. The stern father there
Wept with his children, and grew soft of heart,
And Sella, and the brothers twain, and one
Younger than they, a sister fair and shy,
Strewed the new grave with flowers, and round it set
Shrubs that all winter held their lively green.
Time passed; the grief with which their hearts were wrung

Waned to a gentle sorrow. Sella, now, Was often absent from the patriarch's board; The slippers hung no longer in the porch; And sometimes after summer nights her couch

245. The humanizing of the character of Sella is effected by such touches as this.

SELLA. 297

Was found unpressed at dawn, and well they knew 275 That she was wandering with the race who make Their dwelling in the waters. Oft her looks Fixed on blank space, and oft the ill-suited word Told that her thoughts were far away. In vain Her brothers reasoned with her tenderly. 280 "Oh leave not thus thy kindred;" so they prayed: "Dear Sella, now that she who gave us birth Is in her grave, oh go not hence, to seek Companions in that strange cold realm below, For which God made not us nor thee, but stay 285 To be the grace and glory of our home." She looked at them with those mild eyes and wept, But said no word in answer, nor refrained From those mysterious wanderings that filled Their loving hearts with a perpetual pain. 290

And now the younger sister, fair and shy,
Had grown to early womanhood, and one
Who loved her well had wooed her for his bride,
And she had named the wedding day. The herd
Had given its fatlings for the marriage feast;
The roadside garden and the secret glen
Were rifled of their sweetest flowers to twine
The door posts, and to lie among the locks
Of maids, the wedding guests; and from the boughs
Of mountain orchards had the fairest fruit
Been plucked to glisten in the canisters.

Then, trooping over hill and valley, came
Matron and maid, grave men and smiling youths,
Like swallows gathering for their autumn flight.
In costumes of that simpler age they came,
That gave the limbs large play, and wrapt the form
In easy folds, yet bright with glowing hues
As suited holidays. All hastened on

To that glad bridal. There already stood The priest prepared to say the spousal rite, 318 And there the harpers in due order sat, And there the singers. Sella, midst them all, Moved strangely and serenely beautiful, With clear blue eyes, fair locks, and brow and cheek Colorless as the lily of the lakes, 315 Yet moulded to such shape as artists give To beings of immortal youth. Her hands Had decked her sister for the bridal hour With chosen flowers, and lawn whose delicate threads Vied with the spider's spinning. There she stood With such a gentle pleasure in her looks As might beseem a river-nymph's soft eyes Gracing a bridal of the race whose flocks Were pastured on the borders of her stream.

She smiled, but from that calm sweet face the smile

Was soon to pass away. That very morn

Was soon to pass away. That very morn
The elder of the brothers, as he stood
Upon the hillside, had beheld the maid,
Emerging from the channel of the brook,
With three fresh water lilies in her hand,
Wring dry her dripping locks, and in a cleft
Of hanging rock, beside a screen of boughs,
Bestow the spangled slippers. None before
Had known where Sella hid them. Then she laid
The light brown tresses smooth, and in them twined
The lily buds, and hastily drew forth
And threw across her shoulders a light robe

322. The gentle turning-point of the poem. For a moment the Sella of her dreams stands before us; the idealizing of the human creature has been carried to its finest limit, and is arrested now just short of the disappearance of the human soul.

Wrought for the bridal, and with bounding steps Ran toward the lodge. The youth beheld and marked The spot and slowly followed from afar.

Now had the marriage rite been said; the bride Stood in the blush that from her burning cheek Glowed down the alabaster neck, as morn Crimsons the pearly heaven halfway to the west. At once the harpers struck their chords; a gush 345 Of music broke upon the air; the youths All started to the dance. Among them moved The queenly Sella with a grace that seemed Caught from the swaying of the summer sea. The young drew forth the elders to the dance, 350 Who joined it half abashed, but when they felt The joyous music tingling in their veins, They called for quaint old measures, which they trod As gayly as in youth, and far abroad Came through the open windows cheerful shouts And bursts of laughter. They who heard the sound Upon the mountain footpaths paused and said, "A merry wedding." Lovers stole away That sunny afternoon to bowers that edged The garden walks, and what was whispered there The lovers of these later times can guess.

Meanwhile the brothers, when the merry din
Was loudest, stole to where the slippers lay,
And took them thence, and followed down the brook
To where a little rapid rushed between 365

Its borders of smooth rock, and dropped them in.
The rivulet, as they touched its face, flung up
Its small bright waves like hands, and seemed to take
The prize with eagerness and draw it down.
They, gleaming through the waters as they went,
And striking with light sound the shining stones,

Slid down the stream. The brothers looked and watched

And listened with full beating hearts, till now The sight and sound had passed, and silently And half repentant hastened to the lodge.

The sun was near his set; the music rang
Within the dwelling still, but the mirth waned;
For groups of guests were sauntering toward their homes

375

Across the fields, and far, on hillside paths, Gleamed the white robes of maidens. Sella grew Weary of the long merriment; she thought Of her still haunts beneath the soundless sea, And all unseen withdrew and sought the cleft Where she had laid the slippers. They were gone. She searched the brookside near, yet found them not. Then her heart sank within her, and she ran 386 Wildly from place to place, and once again She searched the secret cleft, and next she stooped And with spread palms felt carefully beneath The tufted herbs and bushes, and again, 390 And yet again she searched the rocky cleft. "Who could have taken them?" That question cleared

The mystery. She remembered suddenly
That when the dance was in its gayest whirl,
Her brothers were not seen, and when, at length,
They reappeared, the elder joined the sports
With shouts of boisterous mirth, and from her eye
The younger shrank in silence. "Now, I know
The guilty ones," she said, and left the spot,
And stood before the youths with such a look
Of anguish and reproach that well they knew
Her thought, and almost wished the deed undone.

Frankly they owned the charge: "And pardon us; We did it all in love; we could not bear That the cold world of waters and the strange 405 Beings that dwell within it should beguile Our sister from us." Then they told her all: How they had seen her stealthily bestow The slippers in the cleft, and how by stealth They took them thence and bore them down the brook, And dropped them in, and how the eager waves Gathered and drew them down: but at that word The maiden shrieked — a broken-hearted shriek — And all who heard it shuddered and turned pale At the despairing cry, and "They are gone," 415 She said, "gone — gone forever. Cruel ones! 'T is you who shut me out eternally From that serener world which I had learned To love so well. Why took ye not my life? Ye cannot know what ye have done." She spake, And hurried to her chamber, and the guests Who yet had lingered silently withdrew.

The brothers followed to the maiden's bower,
But with a calm demeanor, as they came,
She met them at the door. "The wrong is great," 425
She said, "that ye have done me, but no power
Have ye to make it less, nor yet to soothe
My sorrow; I shall bear it as I may,
The better for the hours that I have passed
In the calm region of the middle sea. 430
Go, then. I need you not." They, overawed,
Withdrew from that grave presence. Then her tears
Broke forth a flood, as when the August cloud,
Darkening beside the mountain, suddenly
Melts into streams of rain. That weary night 435
She paced her chamber, murmuring as she walked,

"O peaceful region of the middle sea! O azure bowers and grots, in which I loved To roam and rest! Am I to long for you, And think how strangely beautiful ye are, 440 Yet never see you more? And dearer yet, Ye gentle ones in whose sweet company I trod the shelly pavements of the deep, And swam its currents, creatures with calm eyes Looking the tenderest love, and voices soft 445 As ripple of light waves along the shore, Uttering the tenderest words! Oh! ne'er again Shall I, in your mild aspects, read the peace That dwells within, and vainly shall I pine To hear your sweet low voices. Haply now 450 Ye miss me in your deep-sea home, and think Of me with pity, as of one condemned To haunt this upper world, with its harsh sounds And glaring lights, its withering heats, its frosts, Cruel and killing, its delirious strifes, 455 And all its feverish passions, till I die."

So mourned she the long night, and when the morn Brightened the mountains, from her lattice looked The maiden on a world that was to her A desolate and dreary waste. That day

She passed in wandering by the brook that oft Had been her pathway to the sea, and still Seemed, with its cheerful murmur, to invite Her footsteps thither. "Well may'st thou rejoice, Fortunate stream!" she said, "and dance along Thy bed, and make thy course one ceaseless strain Of music, for thou journeyest toward the deep, To which I shall return no more." The night Brought her to her lone chamber, and she knelt And prayed, with many tears, to Him whose hand

Touches the wounded heart and it is healed.

With prayer there came new thoughts and new desires.

She asked for patience and a deeper love
For those with whom her lot was henceforth cast,
And that in acts of mercy she might lose
The sense of her own sorrow. When she rose
A weight was lifted from her heart. She sought
Her couch, and slept a long and peaceful sleep.
At morn she woke to a new life. Her days
Henceforth were given to quiet tasks of good
In the great world. Men hearkened to her words,
And wondered at their wisdom and obeyed,
And saw how beautiful the law of love
Can make the cares and toils of daily life.

Still did she love to haunt the springs and brooks, As in her cheerful childhood, and she taught 486 The skill to pierce the soil and meet the veins Of clear cold water winding underneath, And call them forth to daylight. From afar She bade men bring the rivers on long rows 490 Of pillared arches to the sultry town, And on the hot air of the summer fling The spray of dashing fountains. To relieve Their weary hands, she showed them how to tame The rushing stream, and make him drive the wheel That whirls the humming millstone and that wields The ponderous sledge. The waters of the cloud, That drench the hillside in the time of rains, Were gathered at her bidding into pools,

479. In the new life to which Sella awakes, one notes that it is the old world in which she had lived endowed now with those gifts which her ripened soul brought from the ideal world in which she had hoped to lose herself.

And in the months of drought led forth again, In glimmering rivulets, to refresh the vales, Till the sky darkened with returning showers.

So passed her life, a long and blameless life, And far and near her name was named with love And reverence. Still she kept, as age came on, 505 Her stately presence; still her eyes looked forth From under their calm brows as brightly clear As the transparent wells by which she sat So oft in childhood. Still she kept her fair Unwrinkled features, though her locks were white. 510 A hundred times had summer, since her birth, Opened the water lily on the lakes, So old traditions tell, before she died. A hundred cities mourned her, and her death Saddened the pastoral valleys. By the brook, 513 That bickering ran beside the cottage door Where she was born, they reared her monument. Ere long the current parted and flowed round The marble base, forming a little isle, And there the flowers that love the running stream, 520 Iris and orchis, and the cardinal flower, Crowded and hung caressingly around The stone engraved with Sella's honored name.

THE LITTLE PEOPLE OF THE SNOW.

[In this tender fancy Bryant has treated the personality of the snow with a kinder, more sympathetic touch than poets have been wont to give it. With many the cruelty of cold or its treacherous nature is most significant. Hans Christian Andersen, for example, in the story of The Ice Maiden has taken a similar theme, but has emphasized the seductive treachery of the Spirit of Cold. Here Bryant has given the true fairy, innocent of evil purpose, yet inflicting grievous wrong through its nature; sorrowing over the dead Eva, but without the remorse of human beings. The time of the story is placed in legendary antiquity by the exclusion of historic times in lines 35-41, and the antiquity is still more positively affirmed by the lines at the close accounting for our not now seeing the Little People of the Snow. The children had asked for a fairy tale, and it is made more real by being placed at so ethereal a distance.

10

Alice. One of your old world stories, Uncle John, Such as you tell us by the winter fire, Till we all wonder it has grown so late.

Uncle John. The story of the witch that ground to death

Two children in her mill, or will you have The tale of Goody Cutpurse?

Nay now, nay; Alice.

Those stories are too childish, Uncle John, Too childish even for little Willy here,

And I am older, two good years, than he; No. let us have a tale of elves that ride

By night with jingling reins, or gnomes of the mine,

Or water-fairies, such as you know how

To spin, till Willy's eyes forget to wink,

And good Aunt Mary, busy as she is,

Lays down her knitting.

Uncle John. Listen to me, then.

'T was in the olden time, long, long ago,

And long before the great oak at our door

6. Goody Cut-purse, or Moll Cut-purse, was a famous highway woman of Shakspere's time who robbed people as audaciously as did Jack Sheppard.

Was yet an acorn, on a mountain's side Lived, with his wife, a cottager. They dwelt Beside a glen and near a dashing brook, A pleasant spot in spring, where first the wren Was heard to chatter, and, among the grass, Flowers opened earliest; but, when winter came, That little brook was fringed with other flowers, -White flowers, with crystal leaf and stem, that grew In clear November nights. And, later still, 26 That mountain glen was filled with drifted snows From side to side, that one might walk across, While, many a fathom deep, below, the brook Sang to itself, and leapt and trotted on 30 Unfrozen, o'er its pebbles, toward the vale. Alice. A mountain's side, you said; the Alps, perhaps,

Or our own Alleghanies.

Uncle John. Not so fast,
My young geographer, for then the Alps,
With their broad pastures, haply were untrod
Of herdsman's foot, and never human voice
Had sounded in the woods that overhang
Our Alleghany's streams. I think it was
Upon the slopes of the great Caucasus,
Or where the rivulets of Ararat
Seek the Armenian vales. That mountain rose
So high, that, on its top, the winter snow
Was never melted, and the cottagers
Among the summer blossoms, far below,
Saw its white peaks in August from their door.

35

One little maiden, in that cottage home, Dwelt with her parents, light of heart and limb, Bright, restless, thoughtless, flitting here and there Like sunshine on the uneasy ocean waves,

And sometimes she forgot what she was bid, As Alice does.

Alice. Or Willy, quite as oft.

Uncle John. But you are older, Alice, two good years,

And should be wiser. Eva was the name Of this young maiden, now twelve summers old.

Now you must know that, in those early times,
When autumn days grew pale, there came a troop
Of childlike forms from that cold mountain top;
With trailing garments through the air they came,
Or walked the ground with girded loins, and threw
Spangles of silvery frost upon the grass,
And edged the brook with glistening parapets,
And built it crystal bridges, touched the pool,
And turned its face to glass, or, rising thence,
They shook, from their full laps, the soft, light snow,
And buried the great earth, as autumn winds
Bury the forest floor in heaps of leaves.

A beautiful race were they, with baby brows,
And fair, bright locks, and voices like the sound
Of steps on the crisp snow, in which they talked
With man, as friend with friend. A merry sight
10
It was, when, crowding round the traveller,
They smote him with their heaviest snow-flakes, flung
Needles of frost in handfuls at his cheeks,
And, of the light wreaths of his smoking breath,
Wove a white fringe for his brown beard, and laughed
15

Their slender laugh to see him wink and grin And make grim faces as he floundered on.

But, when the spring came on, what terror reigned Among these Little People of the Snow!

To them the sun's warm beams were shafts of fire, **

And the soft south-wind was the wind of death. Away they flew, all with a pretty scowl Upon their childish faces, to the north, Or scampered upward to the mountain's top, And there defied their enemy, the Spring; 65 Skipping and dancing on the frozen peaks, And moulding little snow-balls in their palms, And rolling them, to crush her flowers below, Down the steep snow-fields. That, too, must have been Alice. A merry sight to look at. Uncle John. You are right, 90 But I must speak of graver matters now. Mid-winter was the time, and Eva stood Within the cottage, all prepared to dare

Mid-winter was the time, and Eva stood
Within the cottage, all prepared to dare
The outer cold, with ample furry robe
Close belted round her waist, and boots of fur,
And a broad kerchief, which her mother's hand
Had closely drawn about her ruddy cheek.
"Now, stay not long abroad," said the good dame,
"For sharp is the outer air, and, mark me well,
Go not upon the snow beyond the spot
Where the great linden bounds the neighboring

The little maiden promised, and went forth,
And climbed the rounded snow-swells firm with frost
Beneath her feet, and slid, with balancing arms,
Into the hollows. Once, as up a drift

She slowly rose, before her, in the way,
She saw a little creature lily-cheeked,
With flowing flaxen locks, and faint blue eyes,
That gleamed like ice, and robe that only seemed
Of a more shadowy whiteness than her cheek.

On a smooth bank she sat.

field."

Alice. She must have been One of your Little People of the Snow.

Uncle John. She was so, and, as Eva now drew ncle John. She was so, and, as Eva now drew near,

The tiny creature bounded from her seat;

"And come," she said, "my pretty friend; to-day 115
We will be playmates. I have watched thee long,
And seen how well thou lov'st to walk these drifts,
And scoop their fair sides into little cells,
And carve them with quaint figures, huge-limbed men,
Lions, and griffins. We will have, to-day,
A merry ramble over these bright fields,
And thou shalt see what thou hast never seen."

On went the pair, until they reached the bound Where the great linden stood, set deep in snow, Up to the lower branches. "Here we stop," 125 Said Eva, "for my mother has my word That I will go no farther than this tree." Then the snow-maiden laughed; "And what is this? This fear of the pure snow, the innocent snow, That never harmed aught living? Thou may'st roam

For leagues beyond this garden, and return
In safety; here the grim wolf never prowls,
And here the eagle of our mountain crags
Preys not in winter. I will show the way
And bring thee safely home. Thy mother, sure,
Counselled thee thus because thou hadst no guide."

By such smooth words was Eye wents breek

By such smooth words was Eva won to break

137. The idea of sin is very lightly touched in the poem, and there is no conscious temptation to evil on the part of the Snowmaiden. The absence of a moral sense in the Little People of the Snow is very delicately assumed here. It is with fairies that the poet is dealing, and not with diminutive human beings.

Her promise, and went on with her new friend,

Over the glistening snow and down a bank

Where a white shelf, wrought by the eddying

wind,

Like to a billow's crest in the great sea,
Curtained an opening. "Look, we enter here."
And straight, beneath the fair o'erhanging fold,
Entered the little pair that hill of snow,
Walking along a passage with white walls,
And a white vault above where snow-stars shed
A wintry twilight. Eva moved in awe,
And held her peace, but the snow-maiden smiled,
And talked and tripped along, as, down the way,
Deeper they went into that mountainous drift.

145

150

And now the white walls widened, and the vault Swelled upward, like some vast cathedral dome, Such as the Florentine, who bore the name Of Heaven's most potent angel, reared, long since, Or the unknown builder of that wondrous fane. 155 The glory of Burgos. Here a garden lay, In which the Little People of the Snow Were wont to take their pastime when their tasks Upon the mountain's side and in the clouds Were ended. Here they taught the silent frost 160 To mock, in stem and spray, and leaf and flower, The growths of summer. Here the palm upreared Its white columnar trunk and spotless sheaf Of plume-like leaves; here cedars, huge as those ^{146.} The star form of the snow-crystal gives a peculiar truthfulness to the poet's fancy.

^{154.} Michael Angelo, the great Florentine architect, sculptor, and painter.

^{156.} In Bryant's Letters of a Traveller, second series, will be found an account of Burgos Cathedral.

Of Lebanon, stretched far their level boughs, 165 Yet pale and shadowless; the sturdy oak Stood, with its huge gnarled roots of seeming strength, Fast anchored in the glistening bank; light sprays Of myrtle, roses in their bud and bloom, Drooped by the winding walks; yet all seemed wrought 170 Of stainless alabaster; up the trees Ran the lithe jessamine, with stalk and leaf Colorless as her flowers. "Go softly on," Said the snow-maiden; "touch not, with thy hand, The frail creation round thee, and beware 175 To sweep it with thy skirts. Now look above. How sumptuously these bowers are lighted up With shifting gleams that softly come and go! These are the northern lights, such as thou seest In the midwinter nights, cold, wandering flames, 180 That float, with our processions, through the air; And, here within our winter palaces, Mimic the glorious daybreak." Then she told How, when the wind, in the long winter nights, Swept the light snows into the hollow dell, 185 She and her comrades guided to its place Each wandering flake, and piled them quaintly up, In shapely colonnade and glistening arch, With shadowy aisles between, or bade them grow Beneath their little hands, to bowery walks 190 In gardens such as these, and, o'er them all, Built the broad roof. "But thou hast yet to see A fairer sight," she said, and led the way To where a window of pellucid ice Stood in the wall of snow, beside their path. 195 "Look, but thou may'st not enter." Eva looked, And lo! a glorious hall, from whose high vault

Stripes of soft light, ruddy, and delicate green,
And tender blue, flowed downward to the floor
And far around, as if the aerial hosts,
That march on high by night, with beamy spears,
And streaming banners, to that place had brought
Their radiant flags to grace a festival.

And in that hall a joyous multitude Of those by whom its glistening walls were reared, 205 Whirled in a merry dance to silvery sounds, That rang from cymbals of transparent ice, And ice-cups, quivering to the skilful touch Of little fingers. Round and round they flew, As when, in spring, about a chimney top, 210 A cloud of twittering swallows, just returned, Wheel round and round, and turn and wheel again, Unwinding their swift track. So rapidly Flowed the meandering stream of that fair dance, Beneath that dome of light. Bright eyes that looked 215

From under lily brows, and gauzy scarfs Sparkling like snow-wreaths in the early sun, Shot by the window in their mazy whirl. And there stood Eva, wondering at the sight Of those bright revellers and that graceful sweep 220 Of motion as they passed her; — long she gazed, And listened long to the sweet sounds that thrilled The frosty air, till now the encroaching cold Recalled her to herself. "Too long, too long I linger here," she said, and then she sprang 225 Into the path, and with a hurried step Followed it upward. Ever by her side Her little guide kept pace. As on they went Eva bemoaned her fault: "What must they think --The dear ones in the cottage, while so long, 230

Hour after hour, I stay without? I know That they will seek me far and near, and weep To find me not. How could I, wickedly, Neglect the charge they gave me?" As she spoke, The hot tears started to her eyes; she knelt In the mid path. "Father! forgive this sin; Forgive myself I cannot "- thus she prayed, And rose and hastened onward. When, at last, They reached the outer air, the clear north breathed A bitter cold, from which she shrank with dread, But the snow-maiden bounded as she felt The cutting blast, and uttered shouts of joy, And skipped, with boundless glee, from drift to drift, And danced round Eva, as she labored up The mounds of snow. "Ah me! I feel my eyes 245 Grow heavy," Eva said; "they swim with sleep; I cannot walk for utter weariness. And I must rest a moment on this bank, But let it not be long." As thus she spoke, In half-formed words, she sank on the smooth snow, With closing lids. Her guide composed the robe About her limbs, and said, "A pleasant spot Is this to slumber in; on such a couch Oft have I slept away the winter night, And had the sweetest dreams." So Eva slept, But slept in death; for when the power of frost Locks up the motions of the living frame, The victim passes to the realm of Death Through the dim porch of Sleep. The little guide, Watching beside her, saw the hues of life Fade from the fair smooth brow and rounded cheek, As fades the crimson from a morning cloud, Till they were white as marble, and the breath Had ceased to come and go, yet knew she not

At first that this was death. But when she marked 265
How deep the paleness was, how motionless
That once lithe form, a fear came over her.
She strove to wake the sleeper, plucked her robe,
And shouted in her ear, but all in vain;
The life had passed away from those young limbs.
Then the snow-maiden raised a wailing cry,
Such as the dweller in some lonely wild,
Sleepless through all the long December night,
Hears when the mournful East begins to blow.
But suddenly was heard the sound of steps.

But suddenly was heard the sound of steps,
Grating on the crisp snow; the cottagers
Were seeking Eva; from afar they saw
The twain, and hurried toward them. As they came,
With gentle chidings ready on their lips,
And marked that deathlike sleep, and heard the tale

Of the snow-maiden, mortal anguish fell Upon their hearts, and bitter words of grief And blame were uttered: "Cruel, cruel one, To tempt our daughter thus, and cruel we, Who suffered her to wander forth alone 285 In this fierce cold." They lifted the dear child, And bore her home and chafed her tender limbs, And strove, by all the simple arts they knew, To make the chilled blood move, and win the breath Back to her bosom; fruitlessly they strove. 290 The little maid was dead. In blank despair They stood, and gazed at her who never more Should look on them. "Why die we not with her?" They said; "without her, life is bitterness." 201

Now came the funeral-day; the simple folk Of all that pastoral region gathered round, To share the sorrow of the cottagers.

805

They carved a way into the mound of snow To the glen's side, and dug a little grave In the smooth slope, and, following the bier, In long procession from the silent door, Chanted a sad and solemn melody:

"Lay her away to rest within the ground.
Yea, lay her down whose pure and innocent life
Was spotless as these snows; for she was reared
In love, and passed in love life's pleasant spring,
And all that now our tenderest love can do
Is to give burial to her lifeless limbs."

They paused. A thousand slender voices round,
Like echoes softly flung from rock and hill,
Took up the strain, and all the hollow air
Seemed mourning for the dead; for, on that day,
'The Little People of the Snow had come,
From mountain peak, and cloud, and icy hall,
To Eva's burial. As the murmur died,
The funeral-train renewed the solemn chant.

"Thou, Lord, hast taken her to be with Eve,
Whose gentle name was given her. Even so,
For so Thy wisdom saw that it was best
For her and us. We bring our bleeding hearts,
And ask the touch of healing from Thy hand,
As, with submissive tears, we render back
The lovely and beloved to Him who gave."

They ceased. Again the plaintive murmur rose. From shadowy skirts of low-hung cloud it came,
And wide white fields, and fir-trees capped with snow,
Shivering to the sad sounds. They sank away
To silence in the dim-seen distant woods.

The little grave was closed; the funeral-train
Departed; winter wore away; the spring
Steeped, with her quickening rains, the violet tufts,

By fond hands planted where the maiden slept.
But, after Eva's burial, never more
The Little People of the Snow were seen
By human eye, nor ever human ear
Heard from their lips articulate speech again;
For a decree went forth to cut them off,
Forever, from communion with mankind.
The winter clouds, along the mountain-side
Rolled downward toward the vale, but no fair form
Leaned from their folds, and, in the icy glens,
And aged woods, under snow-loaded pines,
Where once they made their haunt, was emptiness.

But ever, when the wintry days drew near,
Around that little grave, in the long night,
Frost-wreaths were laid, and tufts of silvery rime
In shape like blades and blossoms of the field,
As one would scatter flowers upon a bier.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES was born at Cambridge. Massachusetts, August 29, 1809. The house in which he was born stood between the sites now occupied by the Hemenway Gymnasium and the Law School of Harvard University, and was of historic interest as having been the headquarters of General Artemas Ward, and of the Committee of Safety in the days just before the Revolution. the steps of the house stood President Langdon, of Harvard College, tradition says, and prayed for the men who, halting there a few moments, marched forward under Colonel Prescott's lead to throw up intrenchments on Bunker Hill on the night of June 16, 1775. Dr. Holmes's father carried forward the traditions of the old house, for he was Rev. Dr. Abiel Holmes, whose American Annals was the first careful record of American history written after the Revolution.

Born and bred in the midst of historic associations, Holmes had from the first a lively interest in American history and politics, and though possessed of strong humorous gifts, has often turned his song into patriotic channels, while the current of his literary life has been distinctly American.

He began to write poetry when in college at Cambridge, and some of his best-known early pieces, like Evening, by a Tailor, The Meeting of the Dryads, The Spectre Pig, were contributed to the Collegian, an undergraduate journal, while he was studying law the year after his graduation. At the same time he wrote the well-known poem Old Ironsides, a protest against the proposed breaking up of the frigate Constitution; the poem was printed in the Boston Daily Advertiser, and its indignation and fervor carried it through the country, and raised such a popular feeling that the ship was saved from an ignominious destruction. Holmes shortly gave up the study of law, went abroad to study medicine, and returned to take his degree at Harvard in 1836. the same time he delivered a poem, Poetry: a Metrical Essay, before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard, and ever since his profession of medicine and his love of literature have received his united care and thought. In 1838 he was appointed Professor of Anatomy and Physiology at Dartmouth College, but remained there only a year or two. when he returned to Boston, married, and practised medicine. In 1847 he was made Parkman Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the Medical School of Harvard College, a position which he retained until the close of 1882, when he retired, to devote himself more exclusively to literature.

In 1857, when the Atlantic Monthly was established, Professor Lowell, who was asked to be editor, consented on condition that Dr. Holmes should be a regular contributor. Dr. Holmes at that time was known as the author of a number of poems of grace, life, and wit, and he had published several professional papers and books, but his brilliancy as a talker gave him a strong local reputation, and Lowell shrewdly guessed that he would bring to the new magazine a singularly fresh and unusual power. He was right, for The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table, beginning in the first number, unquestionably insured the Atlantic its early success. The readers of the day had forgotten that Holmes, twenty-five years before, had begun a series with the same title in Buckingham's New England Magazine, a periodical of short life, so they did not at first understand why he should begin his first article, "I was just going to say when I was interrupted." From that time Dr. Holmes was a frequent contributor to the magazine, and in it appeared successively, The Autocrat of the Breakfust-Table, The Professor at the Breakfast-Table, The Professor's Story (afterward called Elsie Venner), The Guardian Angel, The Poet at the Breakfast-Table, The New Portfolio (afterward called A Mortal Antipathy), Our Hundred Days in Europe, and Over the Teacups, - prose papers and stories with occasional insertion of verse; here also have been printed the many poems which he has so freely and happily written for festivals and public occasions, including the frequent poems at the yearly meetings of his college class. The wit and humor which have made his poetry so well known would never have given him his high rank had they not been associated with an admirable art which makes every word necessary and felicitous, and a generous nature which is quick to seize upon what touches a common life.

He died suddenly in his home in Boston, while talking with his son, Sunday afternoon, October 7, 1894. His Life and Letters, written and edited by John T. Morse, Jr., a nephew of Mrs. Holmes, was published about two years afterward.

Dr. Holmes's writings have been gathered into fourteen uniform volumes, known as the Riverside Edition, of which three are devoted to poetry, ten to prose, and one contains the two memoirs which he wrote of Emerson and Motley. His complete poetical works are contained in the one-volume Cambridge Edition.

GRANDMOTHER'S STORY OF BUNKER HILL BATTLE.

AS SHE SAW IT FROM THE BELFRY.

[This poem was first published in 1875, in connection with the centenary of the battle of Bunker Hill. The belfry could hardly have been that of Christ Church, since tradition says that General Gage was stationed there watching the battle, and we may make it to be what was known as the New Brick Church, built in 1721, on Hanover, corner of Richmond Street, Boston, rebuilt of stone in 1845, and pulled down at the widening of Hanover Street in 1871. There are many narratives of the battle of Bunker Hill. Frothingham's History of the Siege of Boston is one of the most comprehensive accounts, and has furnished material for many popular narratives. The centennial celebration of the battle called out magazine and newspaper articles, which give the story with little variation. There are not many disputed points in connection with the event, the principal one being the discussion as to who was the chief officer.

'T is like stirring living embers when, at eighty, one remembers

All the achings and the quakings of "the times that tried men's souls;"

2. In December, 1776, Thomas Paine, whose Common Sense had so remarkable a popularity as the first homely expression of public opinion on Independence, began issuing a series of tracts called The Crisis, eighteen numbers of which appeared. The familiar words quoted by the grandmother must often have been

When I talk of Whig and Tory, when I tell the Rebel story,

To you the words are ashes, but to me they're burning coals.

I had heard the muskets' rattle of the April running battle;

Lord Percy's hunted soldiers, I can see their red coats still;

But a deadly chill comes o'er me, as the day looms up before me,

When a thousand men lay bleeding on the slopes of Bunker's Hill.

heard and used by her. They begin the first number of The Crisis: "These are the times that try men's souls: the summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it Now deserves the love and thanks of man and woman."

3. The terms Whig and Tory were applied to the two parties in England who represented, respectively, the Whigs political and religious liberty, the Tories royal prerogative and ecclesiastical authority. The names first came into use in 1679 in the struggles at the close of Charles II.'s reign, and continued in use until a generation or so ago, when they gave place to somewhat corresponding terms of Liberal and Conservative. At the breaking out of the war for Independence, the Whigs in England opposed the measures taken by the crown in the management of the American colonies, while the Tories supported the crown. The names were naturally applied in America to the patriotic party, who were termed Whigs, and the loyalist party, termed Tories. The Tories in turn called the patriots rebels.

5. The Lexington and Concord affair of April 19, 1775, when Lord Percy's soldiers retreated in a disorderly manner to Charlestown, annoyed on the way by the Americans who followed and accompanied them.

'T was a peaceful summer's morning, when the first thing gave us warning

Was the booming of the cannon from the river and the shore:

"Child," says grandma, "what's the matter, what is all this noise and clatter?

Have those scalping Indian devils come to murder us once more?"

Poor old soul! my sides were shaking in the midst of all my quaking,

To hear her talk of Indians when the guns began to roar:

She had seen the burning village, and the slaughter and the pillage,

When the Mohawks killed her father with their bullets through his door.

Then I said, "Now, dear old granny, don't you fret and worry any,

For I'll soon come back and tell you whether this is work or play;

There can't be mischief in it, so I won't be gone a minute"—

For a minute then I started. I was gone the livelong day.

No time for bodice-lacing or for looking glass grimacing;

16. The Mohawks, a formidable part of the Six Nations, were held in great dread, as they were the most cruel and warlike of all the tribes. In connection with the French they fell upon the frontier settlements during Queen Anne's war, early in the eighteenth century, and committed terrible deeds, long remembered in New England households.

Down my hair went as I hurried, tumbling half-way to my heels;

God forbid your ever knowing, when there's blood around her flowing,

How the lonely, helpless daughter of a quiet house-hold feels!

In the street I heard a thumping; and I knew it was the stumping

Of the Corporal, our old neighbor, on the wooden leg he wore,

With a knot of women round him, — it was lucky I had found him,

So I followed with the others, and the Corporal marched before.

They were making for the steeple, — the old soldier and his people;

The pigeons circled round us as we climbed the creaking stair,

Just across the narrow river — Oh, so close it made me shiver! —

Stood a fortress on the hill-top that but yesterday was bare.

Not slow our eyes to find it; well we knew who stood behind it,

Though the earthwork hid them from us, and the stubborn walls were dumb:

Here were sister, wife, and mother, looking wild upon each other,

And their lips were white with terror as they said.

THE HOUR HAS COME!

The morning slowly wasted, not a morsel had we tasted.

And our heads were almost splitting with the cannons' deafening thrill,

When a figure tall and stately round the rampart strode sedately;

It was Prescott, one since told me; he commanded on the hill.

Every woman's heart grew bigger when we saw his manly figure,

With the banyan buckled round it, standing up so straight and tall;

Like a gentleman of leisure who is strolling out for pleasure,

Through the storm of shells and cannon-shot he walked around the wall.

At eleven the streets were swarming, for the red-coats' ranks were forming;

At noon in marching order they were moving to the piers;

How the bayonets gleamed and glistened, as we looked far down; and listened

To the trampling and the drum-beat of the belted grenadiers!

40. Colonel William Prescott, who commanded the detachment which marched from Cambridge, June 16, 1775, to fortify Breed's Hill, was the grandfather of William Hickling Prescott, the historian. He was in the field during the entire battle of the 17th, in command of the redoubt.

42. Banyan—a flowered morning gown which Prescott is said to have worn during the hot day, a good illustration of the unmilitary appearance of the soldiers engaged. His nonchalant walk upon the parapets is also a historic fact, and was for the encouragement of the troops within the redoubt.

- At length the men have started, with a cheer (it seemed faint-hearted),
- In their searlet regimentals, with their knapsacks on their backs,
- And the reddening, rippling water, as after a seafight's slaughter,
- Round the barges gliding onward blushed like blood along their tracks.
- So they crossed to the other border, and again they formed in order;
- And the boats came back for soldiers, came for soldiers, soldiers still:
- The time seemed everlasting to us women faint and fasting, —
- At last they're moving, marching, marching proudly up the hill.
- We can see the bright steel glancing all along the lines advancing —
- Now the front rank fires a volley they have thrown away their shot:
- For behind their earthwork lying, all the balls above them flying,
- Our people need not hurry; so they wait and answer
- Then the Corporal, our old cripple (he would swear sometimes and tipple),—
- He had heard the bullets whistle (in the old French war) before, —
- 62. Many of the officers as well as men on the American side had become familiarized with service through the old French war, which came to an end in 1763.

Calls out in words of jeering, just as if they all were hearing,—

And his wooden leg thumps fiercely on the dusty belfry floor:—

"Oh! fire away, ye villains, and earn King George's shillin's,

But ye'll waste a ton of powder afore a 'rebel' falls; You may bang the dirt and welcome, they're as safe as Dan'l Malcolm

Ten foot beneath the gravestone that you've splintered with your balls!"

STAN again

In the hush of expectation, in the awe and trepidation Of the dread approaching moment, we are well-nigh breathless all;

Though the rotten bars are failing on the rickety belfry railing,

We are crowding up against them like the waves against a wall.

67. Dr. Holmes makes the following note to this line: "The following epitaph is still to be read on a tall gravestone, standing as yet undisturbed among the transplanted monuments of the dead in Copp's Hill Burial Ground, one of the three city [Boston] cemeteries which have been desecrated and ruined within my own remembrance:—

"Here lies buried in a
Stone Grave 10 feet deep
Capt. Daniel Malcolm Mercht
Who departed this Life
October 23, 1769,
Aged 44 years,
A true son of Liberty,
A Friend to the Publick,
An Enemy to oppression,
And one of the foremost
In opposing the Revenue Acts
On America."

Just a glimpse (the air is clearer), they are nearer,
— nearer,— nearer,

When a flash—a curling smoke-wreath—then a crash—the steeple shakes—

The deadly truce is ended; the tempest's shroud is rended;

Like a morning mist it gathered, like a thunder-cloud it breaks!

O the sight our eyes discover as the blue-black smoke blows over!

The red-coats stretched in windrows as a mower rakes his hay;

Here a scarlet heap is lying, there a headlong crowd is flying

Like a billow that has broken and is shivered into spray.

Then we cried, "The troops are routed! they are beat—it can't be designed!

God be thanked, the fight is over!"—Ah! the grim old soldier's smile!

"Tell us, tell us why you look so?" (we could hardly speak we shook so),—

"Are they beaten? Are they beaten? ARE they beaten?"—"Wait a while."

O the trembling and the terror! for too soon we saw our error:

They are baffled, not defeated; we have driven them back in vain;

And the columns that were scattered, round the colors that were tattered.

Toward the sullen silent fortress turn their belted breasts again.

STOP

- All at once, as we were gazing, lo! the roofs of Charlestown blazing!
- They have fired the harmless village; in an hour it will be down!
- The Lord in Heaven confound them, rain his fire and brimstone round them, —
- The robbing, murdering red-coats, that would burn a peaceful town!
- They are marching, stern and solemn; we can see each massive column
- As they near the naked earth-mound with the slanting walls so steep.
- Have our soldiers got faint-hearted, and in noiseless haste departed?
- Are they panic-struck and helpless? Are they palsied or asleep?
- Now! the walls they 're almost under! scarce a rod the foes asunder!
- Not a firelock flashed against them! up the earthwork they will swarm!
- But the words have scarce been spoken when the ominous calm is broken,
- And a bellowing crash has emptied all the vengeance of the storm!
- So again, with murderous slaughter, pelted backwards to the water,
- Fly Pigot's running heroes and the frightened braves of Howe;
- 102. The generals on the British side were Howe, Clinton, and Pigot.

And we shout, "At last they're done for, it's their barges they have run for:

They are beaten, beaten; and the battle's over now!"

And we looked, poor timid creatures, on the rough old soldier's features,

Our lips afraid to question, but he knew what we would ask:

"Not sure," he said; "keep quiet,—once more, I guess, they'll try it—

Here's damnation to the cut-throats!"—— then he handed me his flask,

Saying, "Gal, you're looking shaky; have a drop of Old Jamaiky;

I'm afeard there 'll be more trouble afore the job is done;"

So I took one scorching swallow; dreadful faint I felt and hollow,

Standing there from early morning when the firing was begun.

All through those hours of trial I had watched a calm clock dial,

As the hands kept creeping, creeping,—they were creeping round to four,

When the old man said, "They're forming with their bagonets fixed for storming:

It's the death-grip that's a coming, — they will try the works once more."

With brazen trumpets blaring, the flames behind them

The deadly wall before them, in close array they come;

Still onward, upward toiling, like a dragon's fold uncoiling, -

Like the rattlesnake's shrill warning the reverberating drum!

Over heaps all torn and gory — shall I tell the fearful story,

How they surged above the breastwork, as a sea breaks over a deck:

How, driven, yet scarce defeated, our worn-out men retreated.

With their powder-horns all emptied, like the swimmers from a wreck?

It has all been told and painted; as for me, they say I fainted,

And the wooden-legged old Corporal stumped with me down the stair:

When I woke from dreams affrighted the evening lamps were lighted, -

On the floor a youth was lying; his bleeding breast was bare.

END And I heard through all the flurry, "Send for WAR-REN! hurry! hurry!

> Tell him here's a soldier bleeding, and he'll come and dress his wound!"

> Ah, we knew not till the morrow told its tale of death and sorrow.

> 129. Dr. Joseph Warren, of equal note at the time as a medical man and a patriot. He was a volunteer in the battle, and fell there, the most serious loss on the American side.

- How the starlight found him stiffened on the dark and bloody ground.
- Who the youth was, what his name was, where the place from which he came was,
- Who had brought him from the battle, and had left him at our door,
- He could not speak to tell us; but 't was one of our brave fellows,
- As the homespun plainly showed us which the dying soldier wore.
- For they all thought he was dying, as they gathered round him crying, —
- And they said, "Oh, how they'll miss him!" and, "What will his mother do?"
- Then, his eyelids just unclosing like a child's that has been dozing,
- He faintly murmured, "Mother!"—and—I saw his eyes were blue.
- "Why grandma, how you're winking!" Ah, my child, it sets me thinking
- Of a story not like this one. Well, he somehow lived along;
- So we came to know each other, and I nursed him like a mother,
- Till at last he stood before me, tall, and rosy-cheeked, and strong.
- And we sometimes walked together in the pleasant summer weather;
- "Please to tell us what his name was?" Just your own, my little dear,

There's his picture Copley painted: we became so well acquainted,

That — in short, that 's why I'm grandma, and you children all are here!"

THE SCHOOL-BOY.

[PHILLIPS ACADEMY at Andover, Massachusetts, was founded in 1778, by Judge Samuel Phillips, assisted by two uncles, who also established nearly at the time Phillips Exeter Academy, at Exeter, New Hampshire. The centennial anniversary of the founding of Phillips Academy was celebrated at Andover, in June, 1878, and Dr. Holmes, who had been a boy in the school more than fifty years before, read the following poem.]

THESE hallowed precincts, long to memory dear, Smile with fresh welcome as our feet draw near; With softer gales the opening leaves are fanned, With fairer hues the kindling flowers expand, The rose-bush reddens with the blush of June, The groves are vocal with their minstrel's tune, The mighty elm beneath whose arching shade, The wandering children of the forest strayed, Greets the glad morning in its bridal dress, And spreads its arms the gladsome dawn to bless.

Is it an idle dream that nature shares Our joys, our griefs, our pastimes, and our cares?

147. John Singleton Copley was a portrait painter of celebrity who was born in America in 1737 and painted many famous portraits, which hang in private and public galleries in Boston and vicinity chiefly. He lived in England the latter half of his life, dying there in 1815.

Is there no summons, when at morning's call
The sable vestments of the darkness fall?
Does not meek evening's low-voiced Ave blend
With the soft vesper as its notes ascend?
Is there no whisper in the perfumed air,
When the sweet bosom of the rose is bare?
Does not the sunshine call us to rejoice?
Is there no meaning in the storm-cloud's voice?
No silent message when from midnight skies
Heaven looks upon us with its myriad eyes?

Or shift the mirror; say our dreams diffuse O'er life's pale landscape their celestial hues, Lend heaven the rainbow it has never known, And robe the earth in glories not its own, Sing their own music in the summer breeze, With fresher foliage clothe the stately trees, Stain the June blossoms with a livelier dye And spread a bluer azure on the sky,—Blest be the power that works its lawless will And finds the weediest patch an Eden still; No walls so fair as those our fancies build,—No views so bright as those our visions gild!

So ran my lines, as pen and paper met,
The truant goose-quill travelling like Planchette;
Too ready servant, whose deceitful ways
Full many a slipshod line, alas! betrays;
Hence of the rhyming thousand not a few

15. The vesper bells of the church-call to the prayers which begin Ave Maria, Hail, Mary.

^{36.} Planchette was a toy in the shape of a spherical triangle mounted upon three legs, which was greatly in vogue a few years before this poem was written, on account of its supposed property of guiding the hand that rested upon it to write in obedience to another power.

Have builded worse—a great deal—than they knew.

What need of idle fancy to adorn
Our mother's birthplace on her birthday morn?
Hers are the blossoms of eternal spring,
From these green boughs her new-fledged birds take wing,

These echoes hear their earliest carols sung, 45 In this old nest the brood is ever young. If some tired wanderer, resting from his flight, Amid the gay young choristers alight, These gather round him, mark his faded plumes That faintly still the far-off grove perfumes, 50 And listen, wondering if some feeble note Yet lingers, quavering in his weary throat: -I, whose fresh voice you red-faced temple knew, What tune is left me, fit to sing to you? Ask not the grandeurs of a labored song, 55 But let my easy couplets slide along; Much I could tell you that you know too well; Much I remember, but I will not tell; Age brings experience; graybeards oft are wise, But oh! how sharp a youngster's ears and eyes! 60

My cheek was bare of adolescent down When first I sought the Academic town:

40. In playful travesty of Emerson's line in The Problem : -

"The hand that rounded Peter's dome, And groined the aisles of Christian Rome, Wrought in a sad sincerity; Himself from God he could not free; He builded better than he knew;— The conscious stone to beauty grew,"

50. That the far-off grove still faintly perfumes.

53. The old Phillips Academy building, now used for a gymnasium, is of red brick.

Slow rolls the coach along the dusty road. Big with its filial and parental load; The frequent hills, the lonely woods are past. 65 The school-boy's chosen home is reached at last. I see it now, the same unchanging spot. The swinging gate, the little garden-plot. The narrow yard, the rock that made its floor. The flat, pale house, the knocker-garnished door, 70 The small, trim parlor, neat, decorous, chill, The strange, new faces, kind, but grave and still, Two, creased with age — or what I then called age, — Life's volume open at its fiftieth page; One a shy maiden's, pallid, placid, sweet 75 As the first snow-drop which the sunbeams greet; One the last nursling's; slight she was, and fair. Her smooth white forehead warmed with auburn

Last came the virgin Hymen long had spared, Whose daily cares the grateful household shared, Strong, patient, humble; her substantial frame Stretched the chaste draperies I forbear to name.

Brave, but with effort, had the school-boy come
To the cold comfort of a stranger's home:
How like a dagger to my sinking heart
Came the dry summons, "It is time to part;
"Good-by!" "Goo-ood-by!" one fond maternal kiss.

Homesick as death! Was ever pang like this?...

Too young as yet with willing feet to stray

From the tame fireside, glad to get away,—

Too old to let my watery grief appear,—

And what so bitter as a swallowed tear!

71. The rhythm shows the true pronunciation of decorous. An analogous word is sonorous. See note to p. 17, l. 99.

104

One figure still my vagrant thoughts pursue; First boy to greet me, Ariel, where are you? Imp of all mischief, heaven alone knows how You learned it all, — are you an angel now, Or tottering gently down the slope of years, Your face grown sober in the vale of tears? Forgive my freedom if you are breathing still; If in a happier world, I know you will. You were a school-boy — what beneath the sun So like a monkey? I was also one.

Strange, sure enough, to see what curious shoots
The nursery raises from the study's roots!
In those old days the very, very good
Took up more room — a little — than they should;
Something too much one's eyes encountered then
Of serious youth and funeral-visaged men;
The solemn elders saw life's mournful half, —
Heaven sent this boy, whose mission was to laugh,
Drollest of buffos, Nature's odd protest,
A catbird squealing in a blackbird's nest.

Kind, faithful Nature! While the sour-eyed Scot, Her cheerful smiles forbidden or forgot,
Talks only of his preacher and his kirk, — 115
Hears five-hour sermons for his Sunday work, — Praying and fasting till his meagre face
Gains its due length, the genuine sign of grace, — An Ayrshire mother in the land of Knox
Her embryo poet in his cradle rocks;
Nature, long shivering in her dim eclipse,
Steals in a sunbeam to those baby lips;

94. Ariel is a tricksy sprite in Shakespeare's The Tempest. The reference is to a son of James Murdock, with whom Holmes lived when he first went to Andover.

So to its home her banished smile returns, And Scotland sweetens with the song of Burns!

The morning came; I reached the classic hall,
A clock-face eyed me, staring from the wall;
Beneath its hands a printed line I read:
YOUTH IS LIFE'S SEED-TIME; so the clock-face said:
Some took its counsel, as the sequel showed,
Sowed — their wild oats — and reaped as they had sowed.

How all comes back! the upward slanting floor, The masters' thrones that flank the central door, The long, outstretching alleys that divide The rows of desks that stand on either side, The staring boys, a face to every desk, Bright, dull, pale, blooming, common, picturesque.

Grave is the Master's look; his forehead wears
Thick rows of wrinkles, prints of worrying cares;
Uneasy lie the heads of all that rule,
His most of all whose kingdom is a school.
Supreme he sits; before the awful frown
That bends his brows the boldest eye goes down:
Not more submissive Israel heard and saw
At Sinai's foot the Giver of the Law.

Less stern he seems, who sits in equal state
On the twin throne and shares the empire's weight;
Around his lips the subtle life that plays

137. The master of Dr. Holmes's day was Dr. John Adams.

139. An echo of Shakespeare's line: —

" Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." $King\ Henry\ IV.\ {\rm Pt.\ II.\ Act\ III.\ Scene\ 1.}$

145. Rev. Jonathan Clement, D. D., of Norwich, Vt.; formerly of Woodstock. He married one of the Phillips family.

146. There were two master's desks in little inclosures, facing the school and at equal distances from the centre.

Steals quaintly forth in many a jesting phrase;
A lightsome nature, not so hard to chafe,
Pleasant when pleased; rough-handled, not so safe;
Some tingling memories vaguely I recall,
But to forgive him. God forgive us all!

One yet remains, whose well-remembered name Pleads in my grateful heart its tender claim; His was the charm magnetic, the bright look 155 That sheds its sunshine on the dreariest book: A loving soul to every task he brought That sweetly mingled with the lore he taught; Sprung from a saintly race that never could From youth to age be anything but good, 166 His few brief years in holiest labors spent. Earth lost too soon the treasure heaven had lent. Kindest of teachers, studious to divine Some hint of promise in my earliest line, These faint and faltering words thou canst not hear 165 Throb from a heart that holds thy memory dear.

As to the traveller's eye the varied plain
Shows through the window of the flying train,
A mingled landscape, rather felt than seen,
A gravelly bank, a sudden flash of green,
A tangled wood, a glittering stream that flows
Through the cleft summit where the cliff once rose,
All strangely blended in a hurried gleam,
Rock, wood, waste, meadow, village, hillside, stream,—
So, as we look behind us, life appears,
Seen through the vista of our bygone years.
Yet in the dead past's shadow-filled domain,

153. Rev. Samuel H. Stearns, at one time pastor of the Old South Church, Boston. He was a brother of President Stearns of Amherst College, and the family, in various members, was very intimately connected with Phillips Academy.

Some vanished shapes the hues of life retain; Unbidden, oft, before our dreaming eyes From the vague mists in memory's path they rise. 180 So comes his blooming image to my view, The friend of joyous days when life was new, Hope yet untamed, the blood of youth unchilled, No blank arrear of promise unfulfilled, Life's flower yet hidden in its sheltering fold, Its pictured canvas yet to be unrolled. His the frank smile I vainly look to greet, His the warm grasp my clasping hand should meet; How would our lips renew their school-boy talk, Our feet retrace the old familiar walk! 190 For thee no more earth's cheerful morning shines Through the green fringes of thy tented pines; Ah me! is heaven so far thou canst not hear. Or is thy viewless spirit hovering near, A fair young presence, bright with morning's glow, The fresh-cheeked boy of fifty years ago?

Yes, fifty years, with all their circling suns,
Behind them all my glance reverted runs;
Where now that time remote, its griefs, its joys,
Where are its gray-haired men, its bright-haired boys?

Where is the patriarch time could hardly tire,—
The good old, wrinkled, immemorial "squire"?
(An honest treasurer, like a black-plumed swan,
Not every day our eyes may look upon.)
Where the tough champion who, with Calvin's sword, 205
In wordy conflicts battled for the Lord?

^{182.} Judge Phinehas Barnes, of Portland, Maine.

^{202.} Squire Farrar.

^{205.} Rev. Leonard Woods, D. D., then Professor of Theology in the Seminary.

Where the grave scholar, lonely, calm, austere, Whose voice like music charmed the listening ear, Whose light rekindled, like the morning star, Still shines upon us through the gates ajar? 214 Where the still, solemn, weary, sad-eyed man, Whose care-worn face my wondering eyes would scan, His features wasted in the lingering strife With the pale foe that drains the student's life? Where my old friend, the scholar, teacher, saint, Whose creed, some hinted, showed a speck of taint, He broached his own opinion, which is not Lightly to be forgiven or forgot; Some riddle's point, — I scarce remember now, — Homoi-, perhaps, where they said homo-ou. 224 (If the unlettered greatly wish to know Where lies the difference betwixt oi and o. Those of the curious who have time may search Among the stale conundrums of their church.) Beneath his roof his peaceful life I shared. 225 And for his modes of faith I little cared, — I, taught to judge men's dogmas by their deeds. Long ere the days of india-rubber creeds.

Why should we look one common faith to find, Where one in every score is color-blind?

236

^{207.} The reference is to Moses Stuart, who was Professor in the Theological School, and grandfather to Miss Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

^{211.} Ebenezer Porter.

^{215.} James Murdock.

^{222.} There was an old doctrinal dispute, turning upon a divergence in meaning between two Greek words which differed only by the vowels oi and o; two parties sprang up, called respectively Homoiousians and Homoousians.

If here on earth they know not red from green, Will they see better into things unseen?

Once more to time's old grave-yard I return And scrape the moss from memory's pictured urn. Who, in these days when all things go by steam, 235 Recalls the stage-coach with its four-horse team? Its sturdy driver, — who remembers him? Or the old landlord, saturnine and grim. Who left our hill-top for a new abode And reared his sign-post farther down the road? 240 Still in the waters of the dark Shawshine Do the young bathers splash and think they 're clean? Do pilgrims find their way to Indian Ridge, Or journey onward to the far-off bridge, And bring to younger ears the story back 245 Of the broad stream, the mighty Merrimack? Are there still truant feet that stray beyond These circling bounds to Pomp's or Haggett's pond, Or where the legendary name recalls The forest's earlier tenant — "Deerjump Falls"?

Yes, every nook these youthful feet explore,
Just as our sires and grandsires did of yore;
So all life's opening paths, where nature led
Their fathers' feet, the children's children tread.
Roll the round century's fivescore years away,
Call from our storied past that earliest day
When great Eliphalet (I can see him now, —
Big name, big frame, big voice, and beetling brow),
Then young Eliphalet, ruled the rows of boys
In homespun gray or old-world corduroys, —

^{243.} A singular formation like an embankment running for some distance through the woods near Andover.

^{257.} Eliphalet Pearson, the first principal of the school, and, in later life, professor in the Theological Seminary.

And, save for fashion's whims, the benches show The self-same youths, the very boys we know.

Time works strange marvels; since I trod the green And swung the gates, what wonders I have seen! But come what will, — the sky itself may fall, — 265 As things of course the boy accepts them all. The prophet's chariot, drawn by steeds of flame, For daily use our travelling millions claim; The face we love a sunbeam makes our own; No more the surgeon hears the sufferer's groan; 270 What unwrit histories wrapped in darkness lay Till shovelling Schliemann bared them to the day! Your Richelieu says, and says it well, my lord, The pen is (sometimes) mightier than the sword; Great is the goosequill, say we all; Amen! 275 Sometimes the spade is mightier than the pen; It shows where Babel's terraced walls were raised, The slabs that cracked when Nimrod's palace blazed, Unearths Mycenæ, rediscovers Troy, -Calmly he listens, that immortal boy. 280 A new Prometheus tips our wands with fire, A mightier Orpheus strains the whispering wire,

274. "Beneath the rule of men entirely great
The pen is mightier than the sword."
Edward Bulwer Lytton's Richelieu, Act II. Scene 2.

277. Layard between 1845 and 1850 unearthed Nineveh. The results of his excavations are published in the very interesting work, Nineveh and its Remains.

279. Mycenæ, the ancient royal city of Argos, and Troy, the scene of the Iliad, have been uncovered by "shovelling Schliemann."

281. Prometheus in Greek mythology made men of clay and animated them by means of fire which he stole from heaven. The reference is to the electric light.

282. Orpheus's skill in music was so wonderful that he could

Whose lightning thrills the lazy winds outrun And hold the hours as Joshua stayed the sun, — So swift, in truth, we hardly find a place 285 For those dim fictions known as time and space. Still a new miracle each year supplies, -See at his work the chemist of the skies. Who questions Sirius in his tortured ravs And steals the secret of the solar blaze. 290 Hush! while the window-rattling bugles play The nation's airs a hundred miles away! That wicked phonograph! hark! how it swears! Turn it again and make it say its prayers! And was it true, then, what the story said 295 Of Oxford's friar and his brazen head? While wondering science stands, herself perplexed At each day's miracle, and asks "what next?" The immortal boy, the coming heir of all, Springs from his desk to "urge the flying ball," 300 make even trees and rocks follow him. The telephone and phonograph were just coming into common use when the poem was read.

290. In the spectroscope.

296. Friar Roger Bacon, who lived in the latter half of the thirteenth century, was a scientific investigator, whom popular ignorance made to be a magician. He was said to have constructed a brazen head, from which great things were to be expected when it should speak, but the exact moment could not be known. While Bacon and another friar were asleep and an attendant was keeping watch, the brazen head spoke the words, Time is. The attendant thought that too commonplace a statement to make it worth while to wake his master. Time was, said the head, and then Time is past, and with that fell to the ground with a crash and never could be set up again.

300. See Thomas Gray's On a Distant Prospect of Eton College:

"Who foremost now delight to cleave, With pliant arm, thy glassy wave? The captive linnet which enthral? Cleaves with his bending oar the glassy waves, With sinewy arm the dashing current braves, The same bright creature in these haunts of ours That Eton shadowed with her "antique towers."

Boy! Where is he? the long-limbed youth inquires,

310

Whom his rough chin with manly pride inspires; Ah, when the ruddy cheek no longer glows, When the bright hair is white as winter snows, When the dim eye has lost its lambent flame, Sweet to his ear will be his school-boy name! Nor think the difference mighty as it seems Between life's morning and its evening dreams; Fourscore, like twenty, has its tasks and toys; In earth's wide school-house all are girls and boys.

Brothers, forgive my wayward fancy. Who
Can guess beforehand what his pen will do?
Too light my strain for listeners such as these,
Whom graver thoughts and soberer speech shall please.
Is he not here whose breath of holy song
Has raised the downcast eyes of faith so long?
Are they not here, the strangers in your gates,
For whom the wearied ear impatient waits,
The large-brained scholars whom their toils release,
The bannered heralds of the Prince of Peace?

What idle progeny succeed
To chase the rolling circle's speed,
Or urge the flying ball?"

304. See the ode just cited and beginning: -

"Ye distant spires, ye antique towers, That crown the watery glade, Where grateful Science-still adores Her Henry's holy shade."

319. One of the visitors present was the Rev. Dr. Ray Palmer, author of the well-known hymn, beginning:—

"My faith looks up to Thee."

Such was the gentle friend whose youth unblamed

In years long past our student-benches claimed;
Whose name, illumined on the sacred page,
Lives in the labors of his riper age;
Such he whose record Time's destroying march
Leaves uneffaced on Zion's springing arch:
Not to the scanty phrase of measured song,
Cramped in its fetters, names like these belong;
One ray they lend to gild my slender line,—
Their praise I leave to sweeter lips than mine.

Home of our sires, where learning's temple rose, 535 While yet they struggled with their banded foes, As in the west thy century's sun descends, One parting gleam its dying radiance lends. Darker and deeper though the shadows fall From the gray towers on Doubting Castle's wall, 340 Though Pope and Pagan re-array their hosts, And her new armor youthful Science boasts, Truth, for whose altar rose this holy shrine, Shall fly for refuge to these bowers of thine; No past shall chain her with its rusted vow, 345 No Jew's phylactery bind her Christian brow, But Faith shall smile to find her sister free. And nobler manhood draw its life from thee.

^{325.} Dr. Holmes in a pleasant paper of reminiscences, Cinders from the Ashes, has dwelt at length on his boyish recollections of Horatio Balch Hackett, a schoolmate, and known later as the learned Biblical scholar and student of Palestine explorations.

^{329.} The reference is to Edward Robinson, the pioneer of scientific travel in the Holy Land, one of whose best known discoveries was of the remains of an arch of an ancient bridge, thereafter called "Robinson's Arch."

Long as the arching skies above thee spread, As on thy groves the dews of heaven are shed, With currents widening still from year to year, And deepening channels, calm, untroubled, clear, Flow the twin streamlets from thy sacred hill — Pieria's fount and Siloam's shaded rill!

354. Pieria was the fabled home of the Muses and the birthplace of Orpheus; Siloam, a pool near Jerusalem often mentioned by the prophets and in the New Testament, has passed into poetry through Milton's lines:—

"Or if Sion-hill
Delight thee more, and Siloa's brook, that flowed
Fast by the oracle of God."

Paradise Lost, Book I., 1. 10.

And through the first two lines of Reginald Heber's hymn:

"By cool Siloam's shady rill
How sweet the lily grows."

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

James Russell Lowell died August 12, 1891, at Elmwood, Cambridge, Massachusetts, in the house where he was born February 22, 1819. His early life was spent in Cambridge, and he has sketched many of the scenes in it very delightfully in Cambridge Thirty Years Ago, in his volume of Fireside Travels, as well as in his early poem, An Indian Summer Reverie. His father was a Congregationalist minister of Boston, and the family to which he belonged has had a strong representation in Massachusetts. His grandfather, John Lowell, was an eminent jurist, the Lowell Institute of Boston owes its endowment to John Lowell, a cousin of the poet, and the city of Lowell was named after Francis Cabot Lowell, an uncle, who was one of the first to begin the manufacture of cotton in New England.

Lowell was a student at Harvard, and was graduated in 1838, when he gave a class poem, and in 1841 his first volume of poems, A Year's Life, was published. His bent from the beginning was more decidedly literary than that of any contemporary American poet. That is to say, the history and art of literature divided his interest with the production of literature, and he carries the unusual gift of rare critical power, joined to hearty, spontaneous creation. It may indeed be guessed that the keenness of judgment and incisiveness of wit which characterized his examination of literature sometimes interfered with his poetic power, and made him liable to question his art when he would rather have expressed it unchecked. In connection with Robert Carter, a littérateur who died in 1879, he began, in 1843, the publication of The Pioneer, a Literary and Critical Magazine, which lived a brilliant life of three months. A volume of poetry followed in 1844, and the next year he published Conversations on Some of the Old Poets, - a book which is now out of print, but interesting as marking the enthusiasm of a young scholar, treading a way then almost wholly neglected in America, and intimating a line of thought and study in which he afterward made most noteworthy ventures. Another series of poems followed in 1848, and in the same year The Vision of Sir Launfal. Perhaps it was in reaction from the marked sentiment of his poetry that he issued now a jeu d'esprit, A Fable for Critics, in which he hit off, with a rough and ready wit, the characteristics of the writers of the day, not forgetting himself in these lines: -

"There is Lowell, who's striving Parnassus to climb
With a whole bale of isms tied together with rhyme;
He might get on alone, spite of brambles and boulders,
But he can't with that bundle he has on his shoulders;
The top of the hill he will ne'er come nigh reaching
Till he learns the distinction 'twixt singing and preaching;
His lyre has some chords that would ring pretty well,
But he'd rather by half make a drum of the shell,
And rattle away till he's old as Methusalem,
At the head of a march to the last new Jerusalem."

This, of course, is but a half serious portrait of himself, and it touches but a single feature; others can say better that Lowell's ardent nature showed itself in the series of satirical poems which made him famous, The Biglow Papers, written in a spirit of indignation and fine scorn, when the Mexican War was causing many Americans to blush with shame at the use of the country by a class for its own ignoble ends. The true patriotism which marked these and other of his early poems burned with a steady glow in after years, and illumined poems of which we shall speak presently.

After a year and a half spent in travel, Lowell was appointed in 1855 to the Belles Lettres professorship at Harvard, previously held by Longfellow. When the Atlantic Monthly was established in 1857 he became its editor, and soon after relinquishing that post he assumed part editorship of the North American Review. In these two magazines, as also in Putnam's Monthly, he published poems, essays, and critical papers, which have been gathered into volumes. His prose writings, besides the volumes already mentioned, include two series of Among my Books, historical and critical studies, chiefly in English literature; and My Study Windows, including, with similar subjects, observations of nature and contemporary life. During the war for the Union he published a second series of the Biglow Papers, in which, with the wit and fun of the earlier series, there was mingled a deeper strain of feeling and a larger tone of patriotism. The limitations of his style in these satires forbade the fullest expression of his thought and emotion; but afterward in a succession of poems, occasioned by the honors paid to student-soldiers in Cambridge, the death of Agassiz, and the celebration of national anniversaries during the years 1875 and 1876, he sang in loftier, more ardent strains. The interest which readers have in Lowell is still divided between his rich, abundant prose, and his thoughtful, often passionate verse. The sentiment of his early poetry, always humane, was greatly enriched by larger experience; so that the themes which he chose for his later work demanded and received a broad treatment, full of sympathy with the most generous instincts of their time, and built upon historic foundations.

In 1877 he went to Spain as Minister Plenipotentiary. In 1880 he was transferred to England as Minister Plenipotentiary near the Court of St. James. His duties as American Minister did not prevent him from producing occasional writings, chiefly in connection with public events. Notable among these are his address at the unveiling of a statue of Fielding, and his address on Democracy.

Mr. Lowell returned to the United States in 1885, and was not afterward engaged in public affairs, but passed the rest of his life quietly in his Cambridge home, prevented by failing health from doing much literary work. He made a collection of his later poems in 1888, under the title Heartsease and Rue, and carefully revised his complete works, published in ten volumes in 1890. Since his death this collection has been enriched by Latest Literary Essays and Addresses and Lectures on the Old English Dramatists.

THE VISION OF SIR LAUNFAL.

[AUTHOR'S NOTE. — According to the mythology of the Romancers, the San Greal, or Holy Grail, was the cup out of which Jesus Christ partook of the last supper with his disciples. It was brought into England by Joseph of Arimathea, and remained there, an object of pilgrimage and adoration, for many years, in the keeping of his lineal descendants. It was incumbent upon those who had charge of it to be chaste in thought, word, and deed; but one of the keepers having broken this condition, the Holy Grail disappeared. From that time it was a favorite enterprise of the Knights of Arthur's court to go in search of it. Sir Galahad was at last successful in finding it, as may be read in the seventeenth book of the Romance of King Arthur. Tennyson has made Sir Galahad the subject of one of the most exquisite of his poems.

The plot (if I may give that name to anything so slight) of the following poem is my own, and, to serve its purposes, I have enlarged the circle of competition in search of the miraculous cup in such a manner as to include not only other persons than the heroes of the Round Table, but also a period of time subsequent to the supposed date of King Arthur's reign.]

PRELUDE TO PART FIRST.

Over his keys the musing organist,
Beginning doubtfully and far away,
First lets his fingers wander as they list,

And builds a bridge from Dreamland for his lay:

Then, as the touch of his loved instrument
Gives hope and fervor, nearer draws his theme,

15

First guessed by faint auroral flushes sent Along the wavering vista of his dream.

Not only around our infancy Doth heaven with all its splendors lie; Daily, with souls that cringe and plot, We Sinais climb and know it not.

Over our manhood bend the skies;
Against our fallen and traitor lives
The great winds utter prophecies;
With our faint hearts the mountain strives;
Its arms outstretched, the druid wood
Waits with its benedicite;
And to our age's drowsy blood
Still shouts the inspiring sea.

Earth gets its price for what Earth gives us;
The beggar is taxed for a corner to die in,
The priest hath his fee who comes and shrives us,
We bargain for the graves we lie in;
At the Devil's booth are all things sold,
Each ounce of dross costs its ounce of gold;
For a cap and bells our lives we pay,

9. In allusion to Wordsworth's

"Heaven lies about us in our infancy," in his ode, Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood.

27. In the Middle Ages kings and noblemen had in their courts jesters to make sport for the company; as every one then wore a dress indicating his rank or occupation, so the jester wore a cap hung with bells. The fool of Shakespeare's plays is the king's jester at his best.

Bubbles we buy with a whole soul's tasking:

'T is heaven alone that is given away,

'T is only God may be had for the asking;

No price is set on the lavish summer;

June may be had by the poorest comer.

30

35

45

50

And what is so rare as a day in June?
Then, if ever, come perfect days;
Then Heaven tries earth if it be in tune,
And over it softly her warm ear lays:
Whether we look, or whether we listen,
We hear life murmur, or see it glisten;
Every clod feels a stir of might,

An instinct within it that reaches and towers, And, groping blindly above it for light,

Climbs to a soul in grass and flowers;

The flush of life may well be seen

Thrilling back over hills and valleys;

The cowslip startles in meadows green,

The buttercup catches the sun in its chalice,

And there's never a leaf nor a blade too mean

To be some happy creature's palace;

The little bird sits at his door in the sun,

Atilt like a blossom among the leaves,

And lets his illumined being o'errun

With the deluge of summer it receives;

His mate feels the eggs beneath her wings,

And the heart in her dumb breast flutters and sings;

He sings to the wide world, and she to her nest, — 55 In the nice ear of Nature which song is the best?

Now is the high-tide of the year,

And whatever of life hath ebbed away

Comes flooding back with a ripply cheer,

Into every bare inlet and creek and bay;

Now the heart is so full that a drop overfills it,

We are happy now because God wills it;

No matter how barren the past may have been,

'T is enough for us now that the leaves are green;

We sit in the warm shade and feel right well

How the sap creeps up and the blossoms swell;

We may shut our eyes, but we cannot help knowing

That skies are clear and grass is growing;

The breeze comes whispering in our ear,

That dandelions are blossoming near,

That maize has sprouted, that streams are flowing,
That the river is bluer than the sky,
That the robin is plastering his house hard by;
And if the breeze kept the good news back,
For other couriers we should not lack;

We could guess it all by yon heifer's lowing,—And hark! how clear bold chanticleer,
Warmed with the new wine of the year,
Tells all in his lusty crowing!

80

85

Joy comes, grief goes, we know not how;
Everything is happy now,
Everything is upward striving;
'T is as easy now for the heart to be true
As for grass to be green or skies to be blue,—
'T is the natural way of living:
Who knows whither the clouds have fled?
In the unscarred heaven they leave no wake;
And the eyes forget the tears they have shed,
The heart forgets its sorrow and ache;
The soul partakes of the season's youth,

And the sulphurous rifts of passion and woe

Lie deep 'neath a silence pure and smooth. Like burnt-out craters healed with snow. What wonder if Sir Launfal now Remembered the keeping of his vow?

PART FIRST.

"My golden spurs now bring to me, And bring to me my richest mail, For to-morrow I go over land and sea In search of the Holy Grail; Shall never a bed for me be spread, 100 Nor shall a pillow be under my head, Till I begin my vow to keep; Here on the rushes will I sleep, And perchance there may come a vision true Ere day create the world anew." Slowly Sir Launfal's eyes grew dim, Slumber fell like a cloud on him. And into his soul the vision flew.

II.

The crows flapped over by twos and threes, In the pool drowsed the cattle up to their knees, 110 The little birds sang as if it were The one day of summer in all the year, And the very leaves seemed to sing on the trees: The castle alone in the landscape lay Like an outpost of winter, dull and gray; 115 'T was the proudest hall in the North Countree, And never its gates might opened be, Save to lord or lady of high degree;

125

140

145

Summer besieged it on every side,
But the churlish stone her assaults defied,
She could not scale the chilly wall,
Though around it for leagues her pavilions tall
Stretched left and right,
Over the hills and out of sight;
Green and broad was every tent,
And out of each a murmur went
Till the breeze fell off at night.

III.

The drawbridge dropped with a surly clang,
And through the dark arch a charger sprang,
Bearing Sir Launfal, the maiden knight,
In his gilded mail, that flamed so bright
It seemed the dark castle had gathered all
Those shafts the fierce sun had shot over its wall
In his siege of three hundred summers long,
And, binding them all in one blazing sheaf,
Had cast them forth: so, young and strong,
And lightsome as a locust-leaf,
Sir Launfal flashed forth in his maiden mail,
To seek in all climes for the Holy Grail.

IV.

It was morning on hill and stream and tree,
And morning in the young knight's heart;
Only the castle moodily
Rebuffed the gifts of the sunshine free,
And gloomed by itself apart;
The season brimmed all other things up
Full as the rain fills the pitcher-plant's cup.

v.

As Sir Launfal made morn through the darksome gate,
He was 'ware of a leper, crouched by the same,
Who begged with his hand and moaned as he sate;
And a loathing over Sir Launfal came;
The sunshine went out of his soul with a thrill,
The flesh 'neath his armor 'gan shrink and crawl,
And midway its leap his heart stood still
Like a frozen waterfall;
For this man, so foul and bent of stature,
Rasped harshly against his dainty nature,
And seemed the one blot on the summer morn,
So he tossed him a piece of gold in scorn.

VI.

The leper raised not the gold from the dust: "Better to me the poor man's crust, 160 Better the blessing of the poor, Though I turn me empty from his door; That is no true alms which the hand can hold; He gives only the worthless gold Who gives from a sense of duty; 165 But he who gives but a slender mite, And gives to that which is out of sight, That thread of the all-sustaining Beauty Which runs through all and doth all unite, — The hand cannot clasp the whole of his alms, 170 The heart outstretches its eager palms, For a god goes with it and makes it store To the soul that was starving in darkness before."

PRELUDE TO PART SECOND.

Down swept the chill wind from the mountain peak, From the snow five thousand summers old; On open wold and hill-top bleak It had gathered all the cold, And whirled it like sleet on the wanderer's cheek: It carried a shiver everywhere From the unleafed boughs and pastures bare; 180 The little brook heard it and built a roof 'Neath which he could house him, winter-proof: All night by the white stars' frosty gleams He groined his arches and matched his beams; Slender and clear were his crystal spars 185 As the lashes of light that trim the stars; He sculptured every summer delight In his halls and chambers out of sight; Sometimes his tinkling waters slipt Down through a frost-leaved forest-crypt. 190 Long, sparkling aisles of steel-stemmed trees Bending to counterfeit a breeze; Sometimes the roof no fretwork knew But silvery mosses that downward grew: Sometimes it was carved in sharp relief 195 With quaint arabesques of ice-fern leaf: Sometimes it was simply smooth and clear For the gladness of heaven to shine through, and here He had caught the nodding bulrush-tops And hung them thickly with diamond drops, 200

174. Note the different moods that are indicated by the two preludes. The one is of June, the other of snow and winter. By these preludes the poet, like an organist, strikes a key which he holds in the subsequent part.

220

That crystalled the beams of moon and sun,
And made a star of every one:
No mortal builder's most rare device
Could match this winter-palace of ice;
'T was as if every image that mirrored lay
In his depths serene through the summer day,
Each fleeting shadow of earth and sky,
Lest the happy model should be lost,

Lest the happy model should be lost Had been mimicked in fairy masonry By the elfin builders of the frost.

Within the hall are song and laughter,
The cheeks of Christmas glow red and jolly,
And sprouting is every corbel and rafter

With lightsome green of ivy and holly;
Through the deep gulf of the chimney wide
Wallows the Yule-log's roaring tide;
The broad flame-pennons droop and flap

And belly and tug as a flag in the wind; Like a locust shrills the imprisoned sap, Hunted to death in its galleries blind;

And swift little troops of silent sparks,

Now pausing, now scattering away as in fear, Go threading the soot-forest's tangled darks Like herds of startled deer.

204. The Empress of Russia, Catherine II., in a magnificent freak, built a palace of ice, which was a nine-days' wonder. Cowper has given a poetical description of it in The Task, Book V. lines 131-176.

216. The Yule-log was anciently a huge log burned at the feast of Juul by our Scandinavian ancestors in honor of the god Thor. Juul-tid corresponded in time to Christmas tide, and when Christian festivities took the place of pagan, many ceremonies remained. The great log, still called the Yule-log, was dragged in and burned in the fireplace after Thor had been forgotten.

240

But the wind without was eager and sharp, Of Sir Launfal's gray hair it makes a harp,

And rattles and wrings

The icy strings,

Singing, in dreary monotone,

A Christmas carol of its own,

Whose burden still, as he might guess,

Was — "Shelterless, shelterless, shelterless!"

The voice of the seneschal flared like a torch

As he shouted the wanderer away from the porch,

And he sat in the gateway and saw all night

The great hall-fire, so cheery and bold, Through the window-slits of the castle old,

Build out its piers of ruddy light
Against the drift of the cold.

PART SECOND.

I.

There was never a leaf on bush or tree,
The bare boughs rattled shudderingly;
The river was dumb and could not speak,

For the weaver Winter its shroud had spun;

A single crow on the tree-top bleak

From his shining feathers shed off the cold sun; 245 Again it was morning, but shrunk and cold,

As if her veins were sapless and old,

And she rose up decrepitly

For a last dim look at earth and sea.

II.

Sir Launfal turned from his own hard gate, For another heir in the earldom sate;

260

265

270

275

An old, bent man, worn out and frail,
He came back from seeking the Holy Grail;
Little he recked of his earldom's loss,
No more on his surcoat was blazoned the cross,
But deep in his soul the sign he wore,
The badge of the suffering and the poor.

III.

Sir Launfal's raiment thin and spare
Was idle mail 'gainst the barbéd air,
For it was just at the Christmas time;
So he mused, as he sat, of a sunnier clime,
And sought for a shelter from cold and snow
In the light and warmth of long-ago;
He sees the snake-like caravan crawl
O'er the edge of the desert, black and small,
Then nearer and nearer, till, one by one,
He can count the camels in the sun,
As over the red-hot sands they pass
To where, in its slender necklace of grass,
The little spring laughed and leapt in the shade,
And with its own self like an infant played,
And waved its signal of palms.

IV.

"For Christ's sweet sake, I beg an alms;"—
The happy camels may reach the spring,
But Sir Launfal sees only the grewsome thing,
The leper, lank as the rain-blanched bone,
That cowers beside him, a thing as lone
And white as the ice-isles of Northern seas,
In the desolate horror of his disease.

And Sir Launfal said, - "I behold in thee 284 An image of Him who died on the tree; Thou also hast had thy crown of thorns, — Thou also hast had the world's buffets and scorns, -And to thy life were not denied The wounds in the hands and feet and side: 285 Mild Mary's Son, acknowledge me; Behold, through him, I give to Thee!"

Then the soul of the leper stood up in his eyes And looked at Sir Launfal, and straightway he Remembered in what a haughtier guise 290 He had flung an alms to leprosie, When he girt his young life up in gilded mail And set forth in search of the Holy Grail. The heart within him was ashes and dust: He parted in twain his single crust, 295 He broke the ice on the streamlet's brink, And gave the leper to eat and drink, 'T was a mouldy crust of coarse brown bread, 'T was water out of a wooden bowl, -Yet with fine wheaten bread was the leper fed, 300 And 't was red wine he drank with his thirsty soul.

VII.

As Sir Launfal mused with a downcast face, A light shone round about the place; The leper no longer crouched at his side, But stood before him glorified, 305 Shining and tall and fair and straight As the pillar that stood by the Beautiful Gate, —

Himself the Gate whereby men can Enter the temple of God in Man.

VIII.

His words were shed softer than leaves from the pine, And they fell on Sir Launfal as snows on the brine, That mingle their softness and quiet in one With the shaggy unrest they float down upon: And the voice that was softer than silence said, "Lo, it is I, be not afraid! 315 In many climes, without avail, Thou hast spent thy life for the Holy Grail; Behold, it is here, - this cup which thou Didst fill at the streamlet for me but now: This crust is my body broken for thee, 320 This water His blood that died on the tree; The Holy Supper is kept, indeed, In whatso we share with another's need: Not what we give, but what we share, -For the gift without the giver is bare; 325 Who gives himself with his alms feeds three, -Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me."

IX.

Sir Launfal awoke as from a swound:

"The Grail in my castle here is found!

Hang my idle armor up on the wall,

Let it be the spider's banquet hall;

He must be fenced with stronger mail

Who would seek and find the Holy Grail."

X.

The castle gate stands open now,

And the wanderer is welcome to the hall

330

As the hangbird is to the elm-tree bough;
No longer scowl the turrets tall,
The Summer's long siege at last is o'er;
When the first poor outcast went in at the door,
She entered with him in disguise,
And mastered the fortress by surprise;
There is no spot she loves so well on ground,
She lingers and smiles there the whole year round;
The meanest serf on Sir Launfal's land
Has hall and bower at his command;
And there's no poor man in the North Countree
But is lord of the earldom as much as he.

UNDER THE WILLOWS.

FRANK-HEARTED hostess of the field and wood, Gypsy, whose roof is every spreading tree, June is the pearl of our New England year. Still a surprisal, though expected long, Her coming startles. Long she lies in wait, Makes many a feint, peeps forth, draws coyly back, Then, from some southern ambush in the sky, With one great gush of blossom storms the world. A week ago the sparrow was divine; The bluebird, shifting his light load of song 10 From post to post along the cheerless fence, Was as a rhymer ere the poet come; But now, oh rapture! sunshine winged and voiced, Pipe blown through by the warm wild breath of the West

Shepherding his soft droves of fleecy cloud,

Gladness of woods, skies, waters, all in one,

The bobolink has come, and, like the soul
Of the sweet season vocal in a bird,
Gurgles in ecstasy we know not what Save June! Dear June! Now God be praised for June.

May is a pious fraud of the almanac,
A ghastly parody of real Spring
Shaped out of snow and breathed with eastern
wind;

Or if, o'er-confident, she trust the date,
And, with her handful of anemones,
Herself as shivery, steal into the sun,
The season need but turn his hour-glass round,
And Winter suddenly, like crazy Lear,
Reels back, and brings the dead May in his arms,
Her budding breasts and wan dislustred front
With frosty streaks and drifts of his white beard
All overblown. Then, warmly walled with books,
While my wood-fire supplies the sun's defect,
Whispering old forest-sagas in its dreams,
I take my May down from the happy shelf
Where perch the world's rare song-birds in a row,

17. Bryant has a charming poem, Robert of Lincoln, in which the light-hearted song of the bird gets a homelier but no less delightful interpretation. See, also, Lowell's lines in Sunthin' in the Pastoral Line, No. VI. of the second series of The Biglow Papers:—

"'Nuff sed, June's bridesman, poet o' the year, Gladness on wings, the bobolink, is here; Half-hid in tip-top apple-blooms he swings, Or climbs aginst the breeze with quiverin' wings, Or, givin' way to 't in a mock despair, Runs down, a brook o' laughter, thru the air."

28. In the fifth act of Shakespeare's King Lear, Lear enters with Cordelia dead in his arms.

Waiting my choice to open with full breast, And beg an alms of spring-time, ne'er denied In-doors by vernal Chaucer, whose fresh woods Throb thick with merle and mavis all the year.

July breathes hot, sallows the crispy fields, Curls up the wan leaves of the lilac-hedge, And every eve cheats us with show of clouds That braze the horizon's western rim, or hang Motionless, with heaped canvas drooping idly, Like a dim fleet by starving men besieged, Conjectured half, and half descried afar, Helpless of wind, and seeming to slip back Adown the smooth curve of the oily sea.

But June is full of invitations sweet,

Forth from the chimney's yawn and thrice-read tomes

To leisurely delights and sauntering thoughts
That brook no ceiling narrower than the blue.
The cherry, drest for bridal, at my pane
Brushes, then listens, Will he come? The bee,
All dusty as a miller, takes his toll
Of powdery gold, and grumbles. What a day
To sun me and do nothing! Nay, I think
Merely to bask and ripen is sometimes
The student's wiser business; the brain
That forages all climes to line its cells,
Ranging both worlds on lightest wings of wish,
Will not distil the juices it has sucked
To the sweet substance of pellucid thought,
Except for him who hath the secret learned

44. That is, that give a brazen hue and hardness to the western sky at sunset.

To mix his blood with sunshine, and to take The winds into his pulses. Hush! 't is he! My oriole, my glance of summer fire. Is come at last, and, ever on the watch, Twitches the pack-thread I had lightly wound 78 About the bough to help his housekeeping, -Twitches and scouts by turns, blessing his luck, Yet fearing me who laid it in his way, Nor, more than wiser we in our affairs, Divines the providence that hides and helps. 75 Heave, ho! Heave, ho! he whistles as the twine Slackens its hold; once more, now! and a flash Lightens across the sunlight to the elm Where his mate dangles at her cup of felt. Nor all his booty is the thread; he trails 88 My loosened thought with it along the air, And I must follow, would I ever find The inward rhyme to all this wealth of life.

I care not how men trace their ancestry,
To ape or Adam; let them please their whim;
But I in June am midway to believe
A tree among my far progenitors,
Such sympathy is mine with all the race,
Such mutual recognition vaguely sweet
There is between us. Surely there are times
When they consent to own me of their kin,
And condescend to me, and call me cousin,
Murmuring faint lullabies of eldest time,
Forgotten, and yet dumbly felt with thrills
Moving the lips, though fruitless of all words.
And I have many a life-long leafy friend,
Never estranged nor careful of my soul,
That knows I hate the axe, and welcomes me

Within his tent as if I were a bird, Or other free companion of the earth, 100 Yet undegenerate to the shifts of men. Among them one, an ancient willow, spreads Eight balanced limbs, springing at once all round His deep-ridged trunk with upward slant diverse, In outline like enormous beaker, fit 105 For hand of Jotun, where 'mid snow and mist He holds unwieldy revel. This tree, spared, I know not by what grace, - for in the blood Of our New World subduers lingers vet Hereditary feud with trees, they being 110 (They and the red-man most) our father's foes, -Is one of six, a willow Pleiades, The seventh fallen, that lean along the brink Where the steep upland dips into the marsh, Their roots, like molten metal cooled in flowing, 115 Stiffened in coils and runnels down the bank. The friend of all the winds, wide-armed he towers And glints his steely aglets in the sun, Or whitens fitfully with sudden bloom Of leaves breeze-lifted, much as when a shoal 126 Of devious minnows wheel from where a pike Lurks balanced 'neath the lily-pads, and whirl A rood of silver bellies to the day.

Alas! no acorn from the British oak
'Neath which slim fairies tripping wrought those rings

106. Jotun is a giant in the Scandinavian mythology.

112. The Pleiades were seven daughters of Atlas and Pleione; to escape the hunter Orion, they begged to be changed in form, and were made a constellation in the heavens. Only six were visible to the naked eye, so the seventh was held to be a lost Pleiad, and several stories were told to account for the loss.

Of greenest emerald, wherewith fireside life Did with the invisible spirit of Nature wed, Was ever planted here! No darnel fancy Might choke one useful blade in Puritan fields; With horn and hoof the good old Devil came, 130 The witch's broomstick was not contraband, But all that superstition had of fair, Or piety of native sweet, was doomed. And if there be who nurse unholy faiths, Fearing their god as if he were a wolf 135 That snuffed round every home and was not seen, There should be some to watch and keep alive All beautiful beliefs. And such was that,— By solitary shepherd first surmised Under Thessalian oaks, loved by some maid 140 Of royal stirp, that silent came and vanished, As near her nest the hermit thrush, nor dared Confess a mortal name, - that faith which gave A Hamadryad to each tree; and I Will hold it true that in this willow dwells 145 The open-handed spirit, frank and blithe, Of ancient Hospitality, long since, With ceremonious thrift, bowed out of doors,

In June 't is good to lie beneath a tree
While the blithe season comforts every sense,
Steeps all the brain in rest, and heals the heart,
Brimming it o'er with sweetness unawares,
Fragrant and silent as that rosy snow
Wherewith the pitying apple-tree fills up
And tenderly lines some last-year robin's nest.
There muse I of old times, old hopes, old friends,—
Old friends! The writing of those words has borne
My fancy backward to the gracious past,

The generous past, when all was possible, For all was then untried; the years between Have taught some sweet, some bitter lessons, none Wiser than this, — to spend in all things else, But of old friends to be most miserly. Each year to ancient friendships adds a ring, As to an oak, and precious more and more, Without deservingness or help of ours, They grow, and, silent, wider spread, each year, Their unbought ring of shelter or of shade. Sacred to me the lichens on the bark, Which Nature's milliners would scrape away; Most dear and sacred every withered limb! 'T is good to set them early, for our faith Pines as we age, and, after wrinkles come, Few plant, but water dead ones with vain tears. This willow is as old to me as life: And under it full often have I stretched, Feeling the warm earth like a thing alive, And gathering virtue in at every pore Till it possessed me wholly, and thought ceased, Or was transfused in something to which thought Is coarse and dull of sense. Myself was lost, Gone from me like an ache, and what remained Become a part of the universal joy. My soul went forth, and, mingling with the tree, Danced in the leaves; or, floating in the cloud, Saw its white double in the stream below: Or else, sublimed to purer ecstasy, Dilated in the broad blue over all. I was the wind that dappled the lush grass, The tide that crept with coolness to its roots. The thin-winged swallow skating on the air; The life that gladdened everything was mine.

Was I then truly all that I beheld?
Or is this stream of being but a glass
Where the mind sees its visionary self,
As, when the kingfisher flits o'er his bay,
Across the river's hollow heaven below,
His picture flits,—another, yet the same?
But suddenly the sound of human voice
Or footfall, like the drop a chemist pours,
Doth in opacous cloud precipitate
The consciousness that seemed but now dissolved
Into an essence rarer than its own,
And I am narrowed to myself once more.

For here not long is solitude secure,

Nor Fantasy left vacant to her spell.

Here, sometimes, in this paradise of shade,
Rippled with western winds, the dusty Tramp,
Seeing the treeless causey burn beyond,
Halts to unroll his bundle of strange food
And munch an unearned meal. I cannot help
Liking this creature, lavish Summer's bedesman,
Who from the almshouse steals when nights grow warm.

Himself his large estate and only charge,
To be the guest of haystack or of hedge,
Nobly superior to the household gear
That forfeits us our privilege of nature.
I bait him with my match-box and my pouch,
Nor grudge the uncostly sympathy of smoke,
His equal now, divinely unemployed.
Some smack of Robin Hood is in the man,
Some secret league with wild wood-wandering things;
He is our ragged Duke, our barefoot Earl,
By right of birth exonerate from toil,

Who levies rent from us his tenants all, 225 And serves the state by merely being. Here, The Scissors-grinder, pausing, doffs his hat, And lets the kind breeze, with its delicate fan, Winnow the heat from out his dank gray hair, -A grimy Ulysses, a much-wandered man, 230 Whose feet are known to all the populous ways. And many men and manners he hath seen, Not without fruit of solitary thought. He, as the habit is of lonely men, -Unused to try the temper of their mind 235 In fence with others, - positive and shy, Yet knows to put an edge upon his speech. Pithily Saxon in unwilling talk. Him I entrap with my long-suffering knife, And, while its poor blade hums away in sparks, 240 Sharpen my wit upon his gritty mind, In motion set obsequious to his wheel, And in its quality not much unlike.

Nor wants my tree more punctual visitors.

The children, they who are the only rich,
Creating for the moment, and possessing
Whate'er they choose to feign, —for still with them
Kind Fancy plays the fairy godmother,
Strewing their lives with cheap material
For wingéd horses and Aladdin's lamps,
Pure elfin-gold, by manhood's touch profane
To dead leaves disenchanted, —long ago
Between the branches of the tree fixed seats,

230. Ulysses, the hero of Homer's Odyssey, receives the epithet much-wandered in the first line of that poem, an epithet often repeated, and is described as one who had seen many cities of men, and known many minds.

Making an o'erturned box their table. Oft
The shrilling girls sit here between school hours,
And play at What's my thought like? while the boys,
With whom the age chivalric ever bides,
Pricked on by knightly spur of female eyes,
Climb high to swing and shout on perilous boughs,
Or, from the willow's armory equipped
With musket dumb, green banner, edgeless sword,
Make good the rampart of their tree-redoubt
'Gainst eager British storming from below,
And keep alive the tale of Bunker's Hill.

Here, too, the men that mend our village ways, 265 Vexing Macadam's ghost with pounded slate, Their nooning take; much noisy talk they spend On horses and their ills; and, as John Bull Tells of Lord This or That, who was his friend, So these make boast of intimacies long 270 With famous teams, and add large estimates, By competition swelled from mouth to mouth, Of how much they could draw, till one, ill pleased To have his legend overbid, retorts: "You take and stretch truck-horses in a string 275 From here to Long Wharf end, one thing I know, Not heavy neither, they could never draw, -Ensign's long bow!" Then laughter loud and long. So they in their leaf-shadowed microcosm Image the larger world; for wheresoe'er 280 Ten men are gathered, the observant eye Will find mankind in little, as the stars Glide up and set, and all the heavens revolve

266. Macadamized roads have kept alive the name of Sir John Loudon Macadam, who introduced them at the beginning of this century.

In the small welkin of a drop of dew.

I love to enter pleasure by a postern,

Not the broad popular gate that gulps the mob;

To find my theatres in roadside nooks,

Where men are actors, and suspect it not;

Where Nature all unconscious works her will,

And every passion moves with easy gait,

Unhampered by the buskin or the train.

Hating the crowd, where we gregarious men

Lead lonely lives, I love society,

Nor seldom find the best with simple souls

Unswerved by culture from their native bent,

The ground we meet on being primal man

And nearer the deep bases of our lives.

But oh, half heavenly, earthly half, my soul, Canst thou from those late ecstasies descend, Thy lips still wet with the miraculous wine That transubstantiates all thy baser stuff To such divinity that soul and sense, Once more commingled in their source, are lost,— Canst thou descend to quench a vulgar thirst With the mere dregs and rinsings of the world? Well, if my nature find her pleasure so, I am content, nor need to blush; I take My little gift of being clean from God, Not haggling for a better, holding it Good as was ever any in the world, My days as good and full of miracle. I pluck my nutriment from any bush, Finding out poison as the first men did By tasting and then suffering, if I must. Sometimes my bush burns, and sometimes it is

315. As did Moses's bush.

A leafless wilding shivering by the wall; But I have known when winter barberries Pricked the effeminate palate with surprise Of savor whose mere harshness seemed divine.

Oh, benediction of the higher mood 324 And human-kindness of the lower! for both I will be grateful while I live, nor question The wisdom that hath made us what we are, With such large range as from the ale-house bench Can reach the stars and be with both at home. 325 They tell us we have fallen on prosy days, Condemned to glean the leavings of earth's feast Where gods and heroes took delight of old: But though our lives, moving in one dull round Of repetition infinite, become 330 Stale as a newspaper once read, and though History herself, seen in her workshop, seem To have lost the art that dyed those glorious panes Rich with memorial shapes of saint and sage, That pave with splendor the Past's dusky aisles, — Panes that enchant the light of common day With colors costly as the blood of kings, Till with ideal hues it edge our thought, -Yet while the world is left, while nature lasts. And man the best of nature, there shall be 340 Somewhere contentment for these human hearts. Some freshness, some unused material For wonder and for song. I lose myself In other ways where solemn guide-posts say, This way to Knowledge, this way to Repose, 345 But here, here only, I am ne'er betrayed, For every by-path leads me to my love.

God's passionless reformers, influences,
That purify and heal and are not seen,
Shall man say whence your virtue is, or how
Ye make medicinal the wayside weed?
I know that sunshine, through whatever rift
How shaped it matters not, upon my walls
Paints discs as perfect-rounded as its source,
And, like its antitype, the ray divine,
However finding entrance, perfect still,
Repeats the image unimpaired of God.

We, who by shipwreck only find the shores
Of divine wisdom, can but kneel at first;
Can but exult to feel beneath our feet,
That long stretched vainly down the yielding deeps,
The shock and sustenance of solid earth;
Inland afar we see what temples gleam
Through immemorial stems of sacred groves,
And we conjecture shining shapes therein;
Yet for a space we love to wonder here
Among the shells and sea-weed of the beach.

So mused I once within my willow-tent
One brave June morning, when the bluff northwest,
Thrusting aside a dank and snuffling day
That made us bitter at our neighbors' sins,
Brimmed the great cup of heaven with sparkling cheer
And roared a lusty stave; the sliding Charles,
Blue toward the west, and bluer and more blue,
Living and lustrous as a woman's eyes
Look once and look no more, with southward curve
Ran crinkling sunniness, like Helen's hair
Glimpsed in Elysium, insubstantial gold;
From blossom-clouded orchards, far away

The bobolink tinkled; the deep meadows flowed
With multitudinous pulse of light and shade
Against the bases of the southern hills,
While here and there a drowsy island rick
Slept and its shadow slept; the wooden bridge
Thundered, and then was silent; on the roofs
The sun-warped shingles rippled with the heat;
Summer on field and hill, in heart and brain,
All life washed clean in this high tide of June.

UNDER THE OLD ELM.

[NEAR Cambridge Common stands an old elm, having at its base a stone with the inscription, "Under this tree Washington first took command of the American Army, July 3d, 1775." Upon the one hundredth anniversary of this day the citizens of Cambridge held a celebration under the tree, and Mr. Lowell read the following poem.]

Words pass as wind, but where great deeds were done A power abides transfused from sire to son:

The boy feels deeper meanings thrill his ear,
That tingling through his pulse life-long shall run,
With sure impulsion to keep honor clear,
When, pointing down, his father whispers, "Here,
Here, where we stand, stood he, the purely Great,
Whose soul no siren passion could unsphere,
Then nameless, now a power and mixed with fate."
Historic town, thou holdest sacred dust,
Once known to men as pious, learned, just,

And one memorial pile that dares to last; But Memory greets with reverential kiss No spot in all thy circuit sweet as this, Touched by that modest glory as it past, O'er which you elm hath piously displayed These hundred years its monumental shade.

Of our swift passage through this scenery
Of life and death, more durable than we,
What landmark so congenial as a tree
Repeating its green legend every spring,
And, with a yearly ring,
Recording the fair seasons as they flee,
Type of our brief but still-renewed mortality?
We fall as leaves: the immortal trunk remains,
Builded with costly juice of hearts and brains
Gone to the mould now, whither all that be Vanish returnless, yet are procreant still
In human lives to come of good or ill,
And feed unseen the roots of Destiny.

п.

Men's monuments, grown old, forget their names They should eternize, but the place Where shining souls have passed imbibes a grace Beyond mere earth; some sweetness of their fames

12. Memorial Hall, built by the alumni of Harvard, in memory of those who fell in the war for union, a structure embodying more serious thought than any other in Cambridge, and among the few in the country built to endure.

Leaves in the soil its unextinguished trace,
Pungent, pathetic, sad with nobler aims,
That penetrates our lives and heightens them or shames.

This insubstantial world and fleet
Seems solid for a moment when we stand
On dust ennobled by heroic feet
Once mighty to sustain a tottering land,
And mighty still such burthen to upbear,
Nor doomed to tread the path of things that merely were:

Our sense, refined with virtue of the spot, Across the mists of Lethe's sleepy stream Recalls him, the sole chief without a blot, No more a pallid image and a dream, But as he dwelt with men decorously supreme.

2.

Our grosser minds need this terrestrial hint
To raise long-buried days from tombs of print:

"Here stood he," softly we repeat,
And lo, the statue shrined and still,
In that gray minster-front we call the Past,
Feels in its frozen veins our pulses thrill,
Breathes living air and mocks at Death's deceit.
It warms, it stirs, comes down to us at last,
Its features human with familiar light,
A man, beyond the historian's art to kill,
Or sculptor's to efface with patient chisel-blight.

3.

Sure the dumb earth hath memory, nor for naught Was Fancy given, on whose enchanted loom Present and Past commingle, fruit and bloom

70

80

Of one fair bough, inseparably wrought
Into the seamless tapestry of thought.
So charmed, with undeluded eye we see
In history's fragmentary tale
Bright clews of continuity,
Learn that high natures over Time prevail,
And feel ourselves a link in that entail
That binds all ages past with all that are to be.

III.

Beneath our consecrated elm
A century ago he stood,
Famed vaguely for that old fight in the wood
Whose red surge sought, but could not overwhelm
The life foredoomed to wield our rough - hewn helm:—

From colleges, where now the gown
To arms had yielded, from the town,
Our rude self-summoned levies flocked to see
The new-come chiefs and wonder which was he.
No need to question long; close-lipped and tall,
Long trained in murder-brooding forests lone
To bridle others' clamors and his own,
Firmly erect, he towered above them all,

73. Referring to Braddock's defeat, when Washington wrote to his brother: "By the all-powerful dispensations of Providence I have been protected beyond all human probability or expectation; for I had four bullets through my coat, and two horses shot under me, yet I escaped unhurt, although death was levelling my companions on every side of me."

76. Study in Cambridge was suspended, the college buildings were used as barracks, and the students were sent to Concord.

The incarnate discipline that was to free With iron curb that armed democracy.

A motley rout was that which came to stare, In raiment tanned by years of sun and storm, Of every shape that was not uniform, Dotted with regimentals here and there; An army all of captains, used to pray 96 And stiff in fight, but serious drill's despair. Skilled to debate their orders, not obey; Deacons were there, selectmen, men of note In half-tamed hamlets ambushed round with woods. Ready to settle Freewill by a vote, But largely liberal to its private moods: Prompt to assert by manners, voice, or pen, Or ruder arms, their rights as Englishmen, Nor much fastidious as to how and when: Yet seasoned stuff and fittest to create 100 A thought-staid army or a lasting state: Haughty they said he was, at first; severe; But owned, as all men own, the steady hand Upon the bridle patient to command, Prized, as all prize, the justice pure from fear, And learned to honor first, then love him, then revere.

Such power there is in clear-eyed self-restraint

And purpose clean as light from every selfish taint.

86. The letters of Washington and of other generals in the early part of the Revolutionary war bear repeated witness to the undisciplined character of the troops. "I found a mixed multitude of people here," writes Washington, July 27th, "under very little discipline, order, or government."

Musing beneath the legendary tree, The years between furl off: I seem to see 110 The sun-flecks, shaken the stirred foliage through, Dapple with gold his sober buff and blue And weave prophetic aureoles round the head That shines our beacon now nor darkens with the dead. O man of silent mood, 115 A stranger among strangers then, How art thou since renowned the Great, the Good, Familiar as the day in all the homes of men! The wingéd years, that winnow praise and blame, Blow many names out: they but fan to flame 120 The self-renewing splendors of thy fame.

IV.

How many subtlest influences unite,
With spiritual touch of joy or pain,
Invisible as air and soft as light,
To body forth that image of the brain
We call our Country, visionary shape,
Loved more than woman, fuller of fire than wine,
Whose charm can none define,
Nor any, though he flee it, can escape!
All party-colored threads the weaver Time
Sets in his web, now trivial, now sublime,

112. The American colors in the Revolution were buff and blue. Fox wore them in Parliament, as did Burke also on occasion. There is discussion as to the origin of the colors, for which see Stanhope's Miscellanies, First Series, pp. 116–122, and Proceedings Massachusetts Historical Society, January, 1859, pp. 149–154.

All memories, all forebodings, hopes and fears,
Mountain and river, forest, prairie, sea,
A hill, a rock, a homestead, field, or tree,
The casual gleanings of unreckoned years,
Take goddess-shape at last and there is She,
Old at our birth, new as the springing hours,
Shrine of our weakness, fortress of our powers,
Consoler, kindler, peerless 'mid her peers,
A force that 'neath our conscious being stirs,
A life to give ours permanence, when we
Are borne to mingle our poor earth with hers,
And all this glowing world goes with us on our biers.

Nations are long results, by ruder ways Gathering the might that warrants length of days; 145 They may be pieced of half-reluctant shares Welded by hammer-strokes of broad-brained kings, Or from a doughty people grow, the heirs Of wise traditions widening cautious rings; At best they are computable things, 150 A strength behind us making us feel bold In right, or, as may chance, in wrong; Whose force by figures may be summed and told, So many soldiers, ships, and dollars strong, And we but drops that bear compulsory part 155 In the dumb throb of a mechanic heart: But Country is a shape of each man's mind Sacred from definition, unconfined By the cramped walls where daily drudgeries grind; An inward vision, yet an outward birth 160 Of sweet familiar heaven and earth: A brooding Presence that stirs motions blind Of wings within our embryo being's shell

That wait but her completer spell To make us eagle-natured, fit to dare Life's nobler spaces and untarnished air.

You, who hold dear this self-conceived ideal, Whose faith and works alone can make it real, Bring all your fairest gifts to deck her shrine Who lifts our lives away from Thine and Mine And feeds the lamp of manhood more divine With fragrant oils of quenchless constancy. When all have done their utmost, surely he Hath given the best who gives a character Erect and constant, which nor any shock Of loosened elements, nor the forceful sea Of flowing or of ebbing fates, can stir From its deep bases in the living rock Of ancient manhood's sweet security: And this he gave, serenely far from pride As baseness, born with prosperous stars allied, Part of what nobler seed shall in our loins abide.

No bond of men as common pride so strong,
In names time-filtered for the lips of song,
Still operant, with the primal Forces bound,
Whose currents, on their spiritual round,
Transfuse our mortal will nor are gainsaid:
These are their arsenals, these the exhaustless mines
That give a constant heart in great designs;
These are the stuff whereof such dreams are made

190. A reminiscence of Shakespeare's lines:—

"We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep,"

The Tempest, Act IV. Scene 1.

As make heroic men: thus surely he Still holds in place the massy blocks he laid 'Neath our new frame, enforcing soberly The self-control that makes and keeps a people free.

1.

Oh for a drop of that Cornelian ink
Which gave Agricola dateless length of days,
To celebrate him fitly, neither swerve
To phrase unkempt, nor pass discretion's brink,
With him so statue-like in sad reserve,
So diffident to claim, so forward to deserve!
Nor need I shun due influence of his fame
Who, mortal among mortals, seemed as now
The equestrian shape with unimpassioned brow,
That paces silent on through vistas of acclaim.

2.

What figure more immovably august
Than that grave strength so patient and so pure,
Calm in good fortune, when it wavered, sure,
That mind serene, impenetrably just,
Modelled on classic lines so simple they endure?
That soul so softly radiant and so white
The track it left seems less of fire than light,
Cold but to such as love distemperature?
And if pure light, as some deem, be the force
That drives rejoicing planets on their course,
Why for his power benign seek an impurer source? 215

195. It was Caius Cornelius Tacitus who wrote in imperishable words the life of Agricola.

225

230

His was the true enthusiasm that burns long, Domestically bright, Fed from itself and shy of human sight, The hidden force that makes a lifetime strong, And not the short-lived fuel of a song. Passionless, say you? What is passion for But to sublime our natures and control To front heroic toils with late return, Or none, or such as shames the conqueror? That fire was fed with substance of the soul And not with holiday stubble, that could burn, Unpraised of men who after bonfires run, Through seven slow years of unadvancing war, Equal when fields were lost or fields were won, With breath of popular applause or blame, Nor fanned nor damped, unquenchably the same, Too inward to be reached by flaws of idle fame.

Soldier and statesman, rarest unison; High-poised example of great duties done Simply as breathing, a world's honors worn 235 As life's indifferent gifts to all men born; Dumb for himself, unless it were to God, But for his barefoot soldiers eloquent, Tramping the snow to coral where they trod. Held by his awe in hollow-eyed content; 246 Modest, yet firm as Nature's self; unblamed Save by the men his nobler temper shamed; Never seduced through show of present good By other than unsetting lights to steer New-trimmed in Heaven, nor than his steadfast mood 245

239. At Valley Forge.

More steadfast, far from rashness as from fear; Rigid, but with himself first, grasping still In swerveless poise the wave-beat helm of will; Not honored then or now because he wooed The popular voice, but that he still withstood; 250 Broad-minded, higher-souled, there is but one Who was all this and ours, and all men's, — Wash-Ington.

4.

Minds strong by fits, irregularly great, That flash and darken like revolving lights, Catch more the vulgar eye unschooled to wait 255 On the long curve of patient days and nights Rounding a whole life to the circle fair Of orbed fulfilment; and this balanced soul, So simple in its grandeur, coldly bare Of draperies theatric, standing there 269 In perfect symmetry of self-control, Seems not so great at first, but greater grows Still as we look, and by experience learn How grand this quiet is, how nobly stern The discipline that wrought through lifelong throes 265 That energetic passion of repose.

5.

A nature too decorous and severe,

Too self-respectful in its griefs and joys,

For ardent girls and boys

Who find no genius in a mind so clear

That its grave depths seem obvious and near,

Nor a soul great that made so little noise.

They feel no force in that calm-cadenced phrase,

The habitual full-dress of his well-bred mind,
That seems to pace the minuet's courtly maze
And tell of ampler leisures, roomier length of days.
His firm-based brain, to self so little kind
That no tumultuary blood could blind,
Formed to control men, not amaze,
Looms not like those that borrow height of haze:
It was a world of statelier movement then
Than this we fret in, he a denizen
Of that ideal Rome that made a man for men.

The longer on this earth we live
And weigh the various qualities of men,
Seeing how most are fugitive,
Or fitful gifts, at best, of now and then,
Wind-wavered corpse-lights, daughters of the fen,
The more we feel the high stern-featured beauty
Of plain devotedness to duty,
Steadfast and still, nor paid with mortal praise,
But finding amplest recompense
For life's ungarlanded expense
In work done squarely and unwasted days.
For this we honor him, that he could know
How sweet the service and how free
Of her, God's eldest daughter here below,
And choose in meanest raiment which was she.

288. Daughters of the fen, — will - o' - the - wisps. The Welsh call the same phenomenon corpse-lights, because it was supposed to forbode death, and to show the road that the corpse would take.

Placid completeness, life without a fall
From faith or highest aims, truth's breachless wall;
Surely if any fame can bear the touch,
His will say "Here!" at the last trumpet's call,
The unexpressive man whose life expressed so much.

1.

Never to see a nation born Hath been given to mortal man, 305 Unless to those who, on that summer morn, Gazed silent when the great Virginian Unsheathed the sword whose fatal flash Shot union through the incoherent clash Of our loose atoms, crystallizing them 310 Around a single will's unpliant stem, And making purpose of emotion rash. Out of that scabbard sprang, as from its womb, Nebulous at first but hardening to a star, Through mutual share of sunburst and of gloom, 315 The common faith that made us what we are.

2.

That lifted blade transformed our jangling clans,
Till then provincial, to Americans,
And made a unity of wildering plans;
Here was the doom fixed: here is marked the date When the New World awoke to man's estate,
Burnt its last ship and ceased to look behind:
Nor thoughtless was the choice; no love or hate
Could from its poise move that deliberate mind,

Weighing between too early and too late 325 Those pitfalls of the man refused by Fate: His was the impartial vision of the great Who see not as they wish, but as they find. He saw the dangers of defeat, nor less The incomputable perils of success; 330 The sacred past thrown by, an empty rind; The future, cloud-land, snare of prophets blind; The waste of war, the ignominy of peace; On either hand a sullen rear of woes. Whose garnered lightnings none could guess, 335 Piling its thunder-heads and muttering "Cease!" Yet drew not back his hand, but bravely chose The seeming-desperate task whence our new nation rose.

3.

A noble choice and of immortal seed!

Nor deem that acts heroic wait on chance
Or easy were as in a boy's romance;
The man's whole life preludes the single deed
That shall decide if his inheritance
Be with the sifted few of matchless breed,
Our race's sap and sustenance,
Or with the unmotived herd that only sleep and feed.

Choice seems a thing indifferent; thus or so,
What matters it? The Fates with mocking face
Look on inexorable, nor seem to know
Where the lot lurks that gives life's foremost place. 350
Yet Duty's leaden casket holds it still,

351. See Shakespeare's play of The Merchant of Venice, with its three caskets of gold, silver, and lead, from which the suitors of Portia were to choose fate.

And but two ways are offered to our will,
Toil with rare triumph, ease with safe disgrace,
The problem still for us and all of human race.
He chose, as men choose, where most danger showed, 355
Nor ever faltered 'neath the load
Of petty cares, that gall great hearts the most,
But kept right on the strenuous up-hill road,
Strong to the end, above complaint or boast:
The popular tempest on his rock-mailed coast
Wasted its wind-borne spray,
The noisy marvel of a day;
His soul sate still in its unstormed abode.

VIII.

Virginia gave us this imperial man Cast in the massive mould 365 Of those high-statured ages old Which into grander forms our mortal metal ran; She gave us this unblemished gentleman: What shall we give her back but love and praise As in the dear old unestrangéd days 370 Before the inevitable wrong began? Mother of States and undiminished men. Thou gavest us a country, giving him, And we owe alway what we owed thee then: The boon thou wouldst have snatched from us agen 375 Shines as before with no abatement dim. A great man's memory is the only thing With influence to outlast the present whim And bind us as when here he knit our golden ring. All of him that was subject to the hours Lies in thy soil and makes it part of ours:

Across more recent graves, Where unresentful Nature waves Her pennons o'er the shot-ploughed sod, Proclaiming the sweet Truce of God, 385 We from this consecrated plain stretch out Our hands as free from afterthought or doubt As here the united North Poured her embrownéd manhood forth In welcome of our saviour and thy son. 290 Through battle we have better learned thy worth, The long-breathed valor and undaunted will, Which, like his own, the day's disaster done. Could, safe in manhood, suffer and be still. Both thine and ours the victory hardly won; 395 If ever with distempered voice or pen We have misdeemed thee, here we take it back, And for the dead of both don common black. Be to us evermore as thou wast then. As we forget thou hast not always been, 400 Mother of States and unpolluted men, Virginia, fitly named from England's manly queen.

AGASSIZ.

[JEAN LOUIS RODOLPHE AGASSIZ was of Swiss birth, having been born in Canton Vaud, Switzerland, in 1807 (see Longfellow's pleasing poem, The Fiftieth Birthday of Agassiz), and had already made a name as a naturalist when he came to this country to pursue investigations in 1846. Here he was persuaded to remain, and after that identified himself with American life and learning. He was a masterly teacher, and by his personal enthusiasm and influence did more than any other man in America to stimulate study in natural history (see Appendix). Through his influence a great institution, the Museum of Comparative Zoology, was established at Cambridge, in association with Harvard University, and he remained at the head of it until his death in 1873. His home was in Cambridge, and he endeared himself to all with whom he was associated by the unselfishness of his ambition, the generosity of his affection, and the liberality of his nature. Lowell was in Florence at the time of Agassiz's death, and sent home this poem, which was published in The Atlantic Monthly for May, 1874. Longfellow, besides in the poem mentioned above, has written of Agassiz in his sonnets, Three Friends of Mine, III., and Whittier wrote The Prayer of Agassiz. These poems are well worth comparing, as indicating characteristic strains of the three poets.]

THE electric nerve, whose instantaneous thrill Makes next-door gossips of the antipodes, Confutes poor Hope's last fallacy of ease,—
The distance that divided her from ill:
Earth sentient seems again as when of old

The horny foot of Pan

6. Since Pan was the deity supposed to pervade all nature, the mysterious noises which issued from rocks or caves in mountainous regions were ascribed to him, and an unreasonable fear springing from sudden or unexplained causes came to be called a panic.

Stamped, and the conscious horror ran Beneath men's feet through all her fibres cold: Space's blue walls are mined; we feel the throe From underground of our night-mantled foe:

The flame-winged feet
Of Trade's new Mercury, that dry-shod run
Through briny abysses dreamless of the sun,

Are mercilessly fleet,

And at a bound annihilate
Ocean's prerogative of short reprieve;
Surely ill news might wait,

And man be patient of delay to grieve.

Letters have sympathies
And tell-tale faces that reveal,
To senses finer than the eyes,
Their errand's purport ere we break the seal;
They wind a sorrow round with circumstance

The veil that darkened from our sidelong glance
The inexorable face:

To stay its feet, nor all unwarned displace

But now Fate stuns as with a mace;
The savage of the skies, that men have caught
And some scant use of language taught,
Tells only what he must,—
The steel-cold fact in one laconic thrust.

2.

So thought I, as, with vague, mechanic eyes, I scanned the festering news we half despise Yet scramble for no less,

12. Mercury, the messenger of the gods, and fabled to have winged sandals, was the tutelar divinity of merchants, so that in a double way the modern application to the spirit of the electric telegraph becomes fit.

45

And read of public scandal, private fraud, Crime flaunting scot-free while the mob applaud, Office made vile to bribe unworthiness,

And all the unwholesome mess

The Land of Honest Abraham serves of late

To teach the Old World how to wait,

When suddenly,

As happens if the brain, from overweight Of blood, infect the eye,

Three tiny words grew lurid as I read, And reeled commingling: Agassiz is dead.

> As when, beneath the street's familiar jar, An earthquake's alien omen rumbles far,

39. At the time when this poem was written there was a succession of terrible disclosures in America of public and private corruption; loud vaunts were made of dishonoring the national word in financial matters, and there were few who did not look almost with despair upon the condition of public affairs. The aspect was even more sharply defined to those Americans who, travelling in Europe, found themselves openly or silently regarded as representatives of a nation that seemed to be disgracing itself. Lowell's bitter words were part of the goadings of conscience which worked so sharply in America in the years immediately following. He was reproached by some for such words as this line contains, and, when he published his Three Memorial Poems, made this noble self-defence which stands in the front of that little book:—

"If I let fall a word of bitter mirth
When public shames more shameful pardon won,
Some have misjudged me, and my service done,
If small, yet faithful, deemed of little worth:
Through veins that drew their life from Western earth
Two hundred years and more my blood hath run
In no polluted course from sire to son;
And thus was I predestined ere my birth
To love the soil wherewith my fibres own
Instinctive sympathies; yet love it so
As honor would, nor lightly to dethrone
Judgment, the stamp of manhood, nor forego
The son's right to a mother dearer grown
With growing knowledge and more chaste than snow."

Men listen and forebode, I hung my head, And strove the present to recall, As if the blow that stunned were yet to fall.

3.

Uprooted is our mountain oak,
That promised long security of shade
And brooding-place for many a wingéd thought;
Not by Time's softly-cadenced stroked

With pauses of relenting pity stayed,
But ere a root seemed sapt, a bough decayed,
From sudden ambush by the whirlwind caught
And in his broad maturity betrayed!

4.

Well might I, as of old, appeal to you,
O mountains, woods, and streams,
To help us mourn him, for ye loved him too;
But simpler moods befit our modern themes,
And no less perfect birth of nature can,
Though they yearn tow'rd him, sympathize with man,
Save as dumb fellow-prisoners through a wall;

59. In classical mythology Adonis was fabled as a lovely youth, killed by a boar, and lamented long by Venus, who was inconsolable for his loss. The poets used this story for a symbol of grief, and when mourning the loss of a human being were wont to call on nature to join in the lamentation. This classic form of mourning descended in literature and at different times has found very beautiful expression, as in Milton's Lycidas and Shelley's Adonais, which is a lament over the dead poet Keats. Here the poet might justly call on nature to lament the death of her great student, but he turns from the form as too classic and artificial and remote from his warmer sympathy. In his own strong sense of human life he demands a fellowship of grief from no lower order of nature than man himself.

Answer ye rather to my call,
Strong poets of a more unconscious day,
When Nature spake nor sought nice reasons why,
Too much for softer arts forgotten since
That teach our forthright tongue to lisp and mince,
And drown in music the heart's bitter cry!
Lead me some steps in your directer way,
Teach me those words that strike a solid root

Within the ears of men: Ye chiefly, virile both to think and feel, 75 Deep-chested Chapman and firm-footed Ben, -For he was masculine from head to heel. Nay, let himself stand undiminished by With those clear parts of him that will not die. Himself from out the recent dark I claim 80 To hear, and, if I flatter him, to blame; To show himself, as still I seem to see, A mortal, built upon the antique plan, Brimful of lusty blood as ever ran, And taking life as simply as a tree! 85 To claim my foiled good-by let him appear, Large-limbed and human as I saw him near, Loosed from the stiffening uniform of fame: And let me treat him largely: I should fear, (If with too prying lens I chanced to err, 90 Mistaking catalogue for character,) His wise forefinger raised in smiling blame.

^{76.} Chapman and Ben Jonson were contemporaries of Shake-speare. The former is best known by his rich, picturesque translation of Homer. Lowell may easily have had in mind, among Jonson's Elegies, his majestic ode, On the Death of Sir Lucius Cary and Sir H. Morison. He rightly claims for the poets of the Elizabethan age a frankness and largeness of speech rarely heard in our more refined and restrained time.

^{86.} Since the poet could not be by Agassiz at the last.

Nor would I scant him with judicial breath And turn mere critic in an epitaph; I choose the wheat, incurious of the chaff That swells fame living, chokes it after death, And would but memorize the shining half Of his large nature that was turned to me: Fain had I joined with those that honored him With eyes that darkened because his were dim, 100 And now been silent: but it might not be.

In some the genius is a thing apart, A pillared hermit of the brain, Hoarding with incommunicable art Its intellectual gain;

Man's web of circumstance and fate They from their perch of self observe,

Indifferent as the figures on a slate

Are to the planet's sun-swung curve Whose bright returns they calculate; Their nice adjustment, part to part,

Were shaken from its serviceable mood By unpremeditated stirs of heart

Or jar of human neighborhood: Some find their natural selves, and only then, In furloughs of divine escape from men,

And when, by that brief ecstasy left bare, Driven by some instinct of desire,

They wander worldward, 't is to blink and stare, Like wild things of the wood about a fire,

120. Travellers in the wilderness find their camp-fires the attraction of the beasts that prowl about the camp.

145

Dazed by the social glow they cannot share; His nature brooked no lonely lair, But basked and bourgeoned in copartnery, Companionship, and open-windowed glee: He knew, for he had tried. 125 Those speculative heights that lure The unpractised foot, impatient of a guide, Tow'rd ether too attenuately pure For sweet unconscious breath, though dear to pride, But better loved the foothold sure Of paths that wind by old abodes of men Who hope at last the churchyard's peace secure, And follow time-worn rules, that them suffice, Learned from their sires, traditionally wise, Careful of honest custom's how and when; 135 His mind, too brave to look on Truth askance, No more those habitudes of faith could share. But, tinged with sweetness of the old Swiss manse,

Lingered around them still and fain would spare. Patient to spy a sullen egg for weeks,
The enigma of creation to surprise,
His truer instinct sought the life that speaks
Without a mystery from kindly eyes;
In no self-spun cocoon of prudence wound,
He by the touch of men was best inspired,
And caught his native greatness at rebound
From generosities itself had fired;

Then how the heat through every fibre ran,

125. "Agassiz was a born metaphysician, and moreover had pursued severe studies in philosophy. Those who knew him well were constantly surprised at the ease with which he handled the more intricate problems of thought." Theodore Lyman, in Recollections of Agassiz, Atlantic Monthly, February, 1874.

Felt in the gathering presence of the man, While the apt word and gesture came unbid! Virtues and faults it to one metal wrought,

Fined all his blood to thought, And ran the molten man in all he said or did. All Tully's rules and all Quintilian's too He by the light of listening faces knew, 15% And his rapt audience all unconscious lent Their own roused force to make him eloquent; Persuasion fondled in his look and tone: Our speech (with strangers prudish) he could bring To find new charms in accents not her own; Her cov constraints and icy hindrances Melted upon his lips to natural ease, As a brook's fetters swell the dance of spring. Nor yet all sweetness: not in vain he wore, Nor in the sheath of ceremony, controlled 165 By velvet courtesy or caution cold, That sword of honest anger prized of old, But, with two-handed wrath,

If baseness or pretension crossed his path,
Struck once nor needed to strike more.

2.

His magic was not far to seek,—
He was so human! whether strong or weak,
Far from his kind he neither sank nor soared,
But sate an equal guest at every board:
No beggar ever felt him condescend,

154. Tully is the now somewhat old-fashioned English way of referring to Marcus Tullius Cicero, whose book De Oratore and Quintilian's Institutiones Oratoriæ were the most celebrated ancient works on rhetoric.

No prince presume; for still himself he bare
At manhood's simple level, and where'er
He met a stranger, there he left a friend.
How large an aspect! nobly unsevere,
With freshness round him of Oympian cheer,
Like visits of those earthly gods he came;
His look, wherever its good-fortune fell,
Doubled the feast without a miracle,
And on the hearthstone danced a happier flame;
Philemon's crabbed vintage grew benign;
Amphitryon's gold-juice humanized to wine.

Such company as wisest moods befits, Yet with no pedant blindness to the worth

I see in vision the warm-lighted hall,
The living and the dead I see again,
And but my chair is empty; 'mid them all
'T is I that seem the dead: they all remain
Immortal, changeless creatures of the brain:
Well-nigh I doubt which world is real most,
Of sense or spirit, to the truly sane;
In this abstraction it were light to deem
Myself the figment of some stronger dream;
They are the real things, and I the ghost
That glide unhindered through the solid door,
Vainly for recognition seek from chair to chair,
And strive to speak and am but futile air,
As truly most of us are little more.

3.

Him most I see whom we most dearly miss,

The latest parted thence,
His features poised in genial armistice
And armed neutrality of self-defence
Beneath the forehead's walled preëminence,
While Tyro, plucking facts with careless reach,
Settles off-hand our human how and whence;
The long-trained veteran scarcely wincing hears
The infallible strategy of volunteers

218. Agassiz himself.

Making through Nature's walls its easy breach,
And seems to learn where he alone could teach.
Ample and ruddy, the board's end he fills
As he our fireside were, our light and heat,
Centre where minds diverse and various skills
Find their warm nook and stretch unhampered feet;
I see the firm benignity of face,
Wide-smiling champaign, without tameness sweet,
The mass Teutonic toned to Gallic grace,
The eyes whose sunshine runs before the lips
While Holmes's rockets curve their long ellipse,
And burst in seeds of fire that burst again
To drop in scintillating rain.

4.

There too the face half-rustic, half-divine,
Self-poised, sagacious, freaked with humor fine,
Of him who taught us not to mow and mope
About our fancied selves, but seek our scope
In Nature's world and Man's, nor fade to hollow trope,

Content with our New World and timely bold
To challenge the o'ermastery of the old;
Listening with eyes averse I see him sit
Pricked with the cider of the Judge's wit

240. Ralph Waldo Emerson. The words half-rustic, half-divine, recall Lowell's earlier characterization in his Fable for Critics:—

"A Greek head on right Yankee shoulders, whose range Has Olympus for one pole, for t'other the Exchange; He seems, to my thinking (although I 'm afraid The comparison must, long ere this, have been made), A Plotinus Montaigne, where the Egyptian's gold mist And the Gascon's shrewd wit cheek by jowl coexist."

248. Judge E. R. Hoar.

Curves sharper to restrain

The merriment whose most unruly moods

Pass not the dumb laugh learned in listening

Pass not the dumb laugh learned in listening woods
Of silence-shedding pine:

Hard by is he whose art's consoling spell
Has given both worlds a whiff of asphodel,
His look still vernal 'mid the wintry ring
Of petals that remember, not foretell,
The paler primrose of a second spring.

And more there are: but other forms arise
And seen as clear, albeit with dimmer eyes:

New England's poet, soul reserved and deep,
November nature with a name of May,
Whom high o'er Concord plains we laid to sleep,
While the orchards mocked us in their white array, 270
And building robins wondered at our tears,

Snatched in his prime, the shape august
That should have stood unbent 'neath fourscore years,

The noble head, the eyes of furtive trust,

All gone to speechless dust;

And he our passing guest,
Shy nature, too, and stung with life's unrest,
Whom we too briefly had but could not hold,
Who brought ripe Oxford's culture to our board,

The Past's incalculable hoard,
Mellowed by scutcheoned panes in cloisters old,
Seclusions ivy-hushed, and pavements sweet
With immemorial lisp of musing feet;
Young head time-tonsured smoother than a friar's,
Boy face, but grave with answerless desires,
Poet in all that poets have of best,
But foiled with riddles dark and cloudy aims,

Who now hath found sure rest,
Not by still Isis or historic Thames,
Nor by the Charles he tried to love with me,
But, not misplaced, by Arno's hallowed brim,
Nor scorned by Santa Croce's neighboring fames,

Arthur Hugh Clough, an English poet, author of the Bothie of Tober-na-Vuolich, and editor of Dryden's Translation of Plutarch's Lives, who came to this country in 1852 with some purpose of making it his home, but returned to England in less than a year. He lived while here in Cambridge, and strong attachments grew up between him and the men of letters in Cambridge and Concord.

Yea truly, as the sallowing years
Fall from us faster, like frost-loosened leaves
Pushed by the misty touch of shortening days,

And that unwakened winter nears,

'T is lips long cold that give the warmest kiss,
'T is the lost voice comes oftenest to our ears;
We count our rosary by the beads we miss:

Now forth into the darkness all are gone, But memory, still unsated, follows on, Retracing step by step our homeward walk, With many a laugh among our serious talk, Across the bridge where, on the dimpling tide, The long red streamers from the windows glide,

319. In walking over West Boston bridge at night one sees the lights from the houses on Beacon Street reflected in the

The world was wrapt in innocence of snow And the cast-iron bay was blind and still; These were our poetry; in him perhaps 338 Science had barred the gate that lets in dream, And he would rather count the perch and bream Than with the current's idle fancy lapse; And yet he had the poet's open eye That takes a frank delight in all it sees, 335 Nor was earth voiceless, nor the mystic sky, To him the life-long friend of fields and trees: Then came the prose of the suburban street, Its silence deepened by our echoing feet, And converse such as rambling hazard finds; 340 Then he who many cities knew and many minds And men once world-noised, now mere Ossian forms Of misty memory, bade them live anew As when they shared earth's manifold delight, In shape, in gait, in voice, in gesture true, 345

342. Ossian was a fabulous Celtic warrior poet known chiefly through the pretended poems of Ossian of James Macpherson, who lived in Scotland the latter half of the eighteenth century. There has been much controversy over the exact relation of Macpherson to the poems, which are Scotch crags looming out of Scotch mists.

And, with an accent heightening as he warms, Would stop forgetful of the shortening night, Drop my confining arm, and pour profuse Much wordly wisdom kept for others' use, Not for his own, for he was rash and free, 250 His purse or knowledge all men's, like the sea. Still can I hear his voice's shrilling might (With pauses broken, while the fitful spark He blew more hotly rounded on the dark To hint his features with a Rembrandt light) Call Oken back, or Humboldt, or Lamarck, Or Cuvier's taller shade, and many more Whom he had seen, or knew from others' sight, And make them men to me as ne'er before: Not seldom, as the undeadened fibre stirred 360 Of noble friendships knit beyond the sea, German or French thrust by the lagging word, For a good leash of mother-tongues had he. At last, arrived at where our paths divide, "Good night!" and, ere the distance grew wide. 365

Oken was a remarkable and eccentric Swiss naturalist, 1779–1851; Humboldt a great naturalist and traveller, known by his Kosmos, 1769–1859; Lamarck, 1744–1829; Cuvier, in some respects the father of modern classification, and Agassiz's teacher, 1769–1832; all these were personally known to Agassiz.

Where the ghost shivers of a faith austere
Counting the horns o'er of the Beast,
Still scaring those whose faith in it is least,
As if those snaps o' th' moral atmosphere
That sharpen all the needles of the East,	375
Had been to him like death,
Accustomed to draw Europe's freer breath
In a more stable element;
Nay, even our landscape, half the year morose,
Our practical horizon grimly pent,	380
Our air, sincere of ceremonious haze,
Forcing hard outlines mercilessly close,
Our social monotone of level days,
Might make our best seem banishment;
But it was nothing so;	385
Haply his instinct might divine,
Beneath our drift of puritanic snow,
The marvel sensitive and fine
Of sanguinaria over-rash to blow
And trust its shyness to an air malign;	390
Well might he prize truth's warranty and pledge
In the grim outcrop of our granite edge,
Or Hebrew fervor flashing forth at need
In the gaunt sons of Calvin's iron breed,
As prompt to give as skilled to win and keep;	395
But, though such intuitions might not cheer,
Yet life was good to him, and, there or here,
With that sufficing joy, the day was never cheap;
Thereto his mind was its own ample sphere,
And, like those buildings great that through the

Carry one temperature, his nature large
Made its own climate, nor could any marge

Traced by convention stay him from his bent:

He had a habitude of mountain air;

He brought wide outlook where he went,

And could on sunny uplands dwell

Of prospect sweeter than the pastures fair

High-hung of viny Neufchâtel,

Nor, surely, did he miss

Some pale, imaginary bliss

Of earlier sights whose inner landscape still was

Swiss.

I cannot think he wished so soon to die
With all his senses full of eager heat,
And rosy years that stood expectant by
To buckle the winged sandals on their feet, — 415
He that was friends with earth, and all her sweet
Took with both hands unsparingly:
Truly this life is precious to the root,
And good the feel of grass beneath the foot;
To lie in buttercups and clover-bloom, 420
Tenants in common with the bees,
And watch the white clouds drift through gulfs of trees,

Is better than long waiting in the tomb;
Only once more to feel the coming spring
As the birds feel it when it makes them sing,
Only once more to see the moon
Through leaf-fringed abbey-arches of the elms
Curve her mild sickle in the West
Sweet with the breath of hay-cocks, were a boon

Worth any promise of soothsaver realms 434 Or casual hope of being elsewhere blest: To take December by the beard And crush the creaking snow with springy foot. While overhead the North's dumb streamers shoot Till Winter fawn upon the cheek endeared: Then the long evening-ends Lingered by cozy chimney-nooks, With high companionship of books, Or slippered talk of friends And sweet habitual looks. 440 Is better than to stop the ears with dust. Too soon the spectre comes to say, "Thou must!" 2. When toil-crooked hands are crost upon the breast, They comfort us with sense of rest; They must be glad to lie forever still; 445 Their work is ended with their day: Another fills their room; 't is the World's ancient way, Whether for good or ill; But the deft spinners of the brain, Who love each added day and find it gain, 450 Them overtakes the doom To snap the half-grown flower upon the loom (Trophy that was to be of life-long pain), The thread no other skill can ever knit again. 'T was so with him, for he was glad to live, 'T was doubly so, for he left work begun; Could not this eagerness of Fate forgive Till all the allotted flax were spun? It matters not; for, go at night or noon,

A friend, whene'er he dies, has died too soon,

And, once we hear the hopeless He is dead, So far as flesh hath knowledge, all is said.

I seem to see the black procession go: That crawling prose of death too well I know, The vulgar paraphrase of glorious woe; 465 I see it wind through that unsightly grove, Once beautiful, but long defaced With granite permanence of cockney taste And all those grim disfigurements we love: There, then, we leave him: Him? such costly waste 470 Nature rebels at: and it is not true Of those most precious parts of him we knew: Could we be conscious but as dreamers be. 'T were sweet to leave this shifting life of tents Sunk in the changeless calm of Deity; 475 Nay, to be mingled with the elements, The fellow-servant of creative powers. Partaker in the solemn year's events, To share the work of busy-fingered hours, To be night's silent almoner of dew, 480 To rise again in plants and breathe and grow, To stream as tides the ocean cavern through, Or with the rapture of great winds to blow About earth's shaken coignes, were not a fate To leave us all-disconsolate: 485 Even endless slumber in the sweetening sod

That takes out all our mortal stains. And makes us clearlier neighbors of the clod. Methinks were better worth Than the poor fruit of most men's wakeful pains, The heart's insatiable ache:

But such was not his faith.

Nor mine: it may be he had trod

Outside the plain old path of God thus spake,

But God to him was very God, And not a visionary wraith

Skulking in murky corners of the mind,

And he was sure to be

Somehow, somewhere, imperishable as He. Not with His essence mystically combined,

As some high spirits long, but whole and free,

A perfected and conscious Agassiz. And such I figure him: the wise of old

Welcome and own him of their peaceful fold. Not truly with the guild enrolled

Of him who seeking inward guessed Diviner riddles than the rest.

And groping in the darks of thought Touched the Great Hand and knew it not;

Rather he shares the daily light, From reason's charier fountains won,

Of his great chief, the slow-paced Stagyrite, And Cuvier clasps once more his long-lost son.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

To many readers the name of Emerson is that of a philosophical prose writer, hard to be understood; in time to come it will perhaps be wondered at that the introduction of his name in a volume of American Poems should seem to require an explanation or shadow of an apology; it is likely even that his philosophy will be read and welcomed chiefly for those elements which it has in common with his poetry. His life may be called uneventful as regards external change or adventure. It was passed mainly in Boston and Concord, Massachusetts. He was born in Boston, May 25, 1803. His father, his grandfather, and his great-grandfather were all ministers, and, indeed, on both his father's and mother's side he belonged to a continuous line of ministerial descent from the seventeenth century. At the time of his birth, his father, the Rev. William Emerson, was minister of the First Church congregation, but on his death a few years afterward, Ralph Waldo Emerson, a boy of seven, went to live in the old manse at Concord, where his grandfather had lived when the Concord fight occurred. The old manse was afterward the home at one time of Hawthorne, who wrote there the stories which he gathered into the volumes, Mosses from an Old Manse.

Emerson was graduated at Harvard in 1821, and after teaching a year or two gave himself to the study of divinity. From 1827 to 1832 he preached in Unitarian churches, and was for four years a colleague pastor in the Second Church in Boston. He then left the ministry and afterward devoted himself to literature. He travelled abroad in 1833, in 1847, and again in 1872, making friends among the leading thinkers during his first journey, and confirming the friendships when again in Europe; with the exception of these three journeys and occasional lecturing tours in the United States, he lived quietly at Concord until his death, April 27, 1882.

He had delivered several special addresses, and in his early manhood was an important lecturer in the Lyceum courses which were so popular, especially in New England, forty years ago, but his first published book was Nature, in 1839. Subsequent prose writings were his Essays, under that title, and in several volumes with specific titles, Representative Men and English Traits, which last embodies the results of his first two visits to England.

He wrote poems when in college, but his first publication was through The Dial, a magazine established in 1840, and the representative of a knot of men and women of whom Emerson was the acknowledged or unacknowledged leader. The first volume of his poems was published in 1847, and included those by which he is best known, as The Problem. The Sphinx, The Rhodora, The Humble Bee, Hymn Sung at the Completion of the Concord Monument. After the establishment of The Atlantic Monthly in 1857 he contributed to it both prose and poetry, and verses published in the early numbers, mere enigmas to some, profound revelations to others, were fruitful of discussion and thought; his second volume of poems, May Day and other Pieces, was not issued until 1867. Later, a volume of his collected poems appeared, containing most of those published in the two volumes, and a few in addition. We are told, however, that the published writings of Emerson bear but small proportion to the unpublished. Many lectures have been delivered, but not printed; many poems written, and a few read, which have never been published. The inference from this, borne out by the marks upon what has been published, is that Mr. Emerson set a high value upon literature, and was jealous of the prerogative of the poet. He is frequently called a seer, and this old word, indicating etymologically its original intention, is applied well to a poet who saw into nature and human life with a spiritual power which made him a marked man in his own time, and one destined to an unrivalled place in literature. He fulfilled Wordsworth's lines,—

"With an eye made quiet by the power Of harmony, and the deep power of joy, We see into the life of things."

His literary executor, Mr. J. Elliot Cabot, collected Emerson's writings in twelve volumes, one containing his poetry, the remainder his prose, and also published a life of Emerson in two volumes.

THE ADIRONDACS.

A JOURNAL.

DEDICATED TO MY FELLOW-TRAVELLERS IN AUGUST, 1858.

Wise and polite, — and if I drew Their several portraits, you would own Chaucer had no such worthy crew, Nor Boccace in Decameron.

WE crossed Champlain to Keeseville with our friends, Thence, in strong country carts, rode up the forks Of the Ausable stream, intent to reach The Adirondac lakes. At Martin's Beach We chose our boats; each man a boat and guide,— ⁵ Ten men, ten guides, our company all told.

Next morn, we swept with oars the Saranac,
With skies of benediction, to Round Lake,
Where all the sacred mountains drew around us,
Taháwus, Seward, MacIntyre, Baldhead,
And other Titans without muse or name.
Pleased with these grand companions, we glide on,
Instead of flowers, crowned with a wreath of hills.
We made our distance wider, boat from boat,
As each would hear the oracle alone.
By the bright morn the gay flotilla slid
Through files of flags that gleamed like bayonets,

10

25

Through gold-moth-haunted beds of pickerel-flower, Through scented banks of lilies white and gold, Where the deer feeds at night, the teal by day, On through the Upper Saranac, and up Père Raquette stream, to a small tortuous pass Winding through grassy shallows in and out, Two creeping miles of rushes, pads, and sponge, To Follansbee Water and the Lake of Loons.

Northward the length of Follansbee we rowed,
Under low mountains, whose unbroken ridge
Ponderous with beechen forest sloped the shore.
A pause and council: then, where near the head
Due east a bay makes inward to the land
Between two rocky arms, we climb the bank,
And in the twilight of the forest noon
Wield the first axe these echoes ever heard.
We cut young trees to make our poles and thwarts,
Barked the white spruce to weatherfend the roof,
Then struck a light, and kindled the camp-fire.

The wood was sovran with centennial trees,—Oak, cedar, maple, poplar, beech and fir,
Linden and spruce. In strict society
Three conifers, white, pitch, and Norway pine,
Five-leaved, three-leaved, and two-leaved, grew thereby.
Our patron pine was fifteen feet in girth,
The maple eight, beneath its shapely tower.

[&]quot;Welcome!" the wood-god murmured through the leaves,—

^{37.} Milton frequently employed the form sovran for sovereign, although in many editions the spelling has been changed to the longer form.

'Welcome, though late, unknowing, yet known to me.'

Evening drew on; stars peeped through maple-boughs, Which o'erhung, like a cloud, our camping fire. Decayed millennial trunks, like moonlight flecks, Lit with phosphoric crumbs the forest floor.

Ten scholars, wonted to lie warm and soft 50 In well-hung chambers daintily bestowed, Lie here on hemlock boughs, like Sacs and Sioux, And greet unanimous the joyful change. So fast will Nature acclimate her sons, Though late returning to her pristine ways. 55 Off soundings, seamen do not suffer cold; And, in the forest, delicate clerks, unbrowned, Sleep on the fragrant brush as on down-beds. Up with the dawn, they fancied the light air That circled freshly in their forest dress 60 Made them to boys again. Happier that they Slipped off their pack of duties, leagues behind, At the first mounting of the giant stairs. No placard on these rocks warned to the polls, No door-bell heralded a visitor. 65 No courier waits, no letter came or went, Nothing was ploughed, or reaped, or bought, or sold; The frost might glitter, it would blight no crop, The falling rain will spoil no holiday. We were made freemen of the forest laws, 78 All dressed, like Nature, fit for her own ends, Essaying nothing she cannot perform.

In Adirondac lakes,
At morn or noon, the guide rows bareheaded;
Shoes, flannel shirt, and kersey trousers make

75

His brief toilette: at night, or in the rain, He dons a surcoat which he doffs at morn: A paddle in the right hand, or an oar, And in the left, a gun, his needful arms. By turns we praised the stature of our guides, 80 Their rival strength and suppleness, their skill To row, to swim, to shoot, to build a camp, To climb a lofty stem, clean without boughs Full fifty feet, and bring the eaglet down: Temper to face wolf, bear, or catamount, 85 And wit to trap or take him in his lair. Sound, ruddy men, frolic and innocent, In winter, lumberers; in summer, guides; Their sinewy arms pull at the oar untired Three times ten thousand strokes, from morn to eve.

Look to yourselves, ve polished gentlemen! No city airs or arts pass current here. Your rank is all reversed: let men of cloth Bow to the stalwart churls in overalls: They are the doctors of the wilderness, 95 And we the low-prized laymen. In sooth, red flannel is a saucy test Which few can put on with impunity. What make you, master, fumbling at the oar? Will you catch crabs? Truth tries pretension here. 100 The sallow knows the basket-maker's thumb; The oar, the guide's. Dare you accept the tasks He shall impose, to find a spring, trap foxes, Tell the sun's time, determine the true north, Or stumbling on through vast self-similar woods 105 To thread by night the nearest way to camp?

Ask you, how went the hours?
All day we swept the lake, searched every cove,

North from Camp Maple, south to Osprey Bay, Watching when the loud dogs should drive in deer, 110 Or whipping its rough surface for a trout; Or, bathers, diving from the rock at noon; Challenging Echo by our guns and cries; Or listening to the laughter of the loon; Or, in the evening twilight's latest red, 115 Beholding the procession of the pines; Or, later vet, beneath a lighted jack, In the boat's bows, a silent night-hunter Stealing with paddle to the feeding-grounds Of the red deer, to aim at a square mist. 120 Hark to that muffled roar! a tree in the woods Is fallen: but hush! it has not scared the buck Who stands astonished at the meteor light, Then turns to bound away, - is it too late?

Our heroes tried their rifles at a mark, Six rods, sixteen, twenty, or forty-five; Sometimes their wits at sally and retort,

114. Thoreau, in Walden, has an admirable account of the loon and its habits. "His usual note was this demoniac laughter, yet somewhat like that of a water-fowl; but occasionally, when he had balked me most successfully and come up a long way off, he uttered a long drawn, unearthly howl, probably more like that of a wolf than any bird; as when a beast puts his muzzle to the ground and deliberately howls. This was his looning, — perhaps the wildest sound that is ever heard here, making the woods ring far and wide. I concluded that he laughed in derision at my efforts, confident of his own resources." Page 254.

125

116. One of Mr. Emerson's companions in this excursion, Stillman the artist, painted The Procession of the Pines, the aspect, so familiar to the woodman, of a line of pines upon a hill-top outlined against the evening sky and seeming to be marching solemnly.

15%

With laughter sudden as the crack of rifle;
Or parties scaled the near acclivities
Competing seekers of a rumored lake,
Whose unauthenticated waves we named
Lake Probability, — our carbuncle,
Long sought, not found.

Two Doctors in the camp Dissected the slain deer, weighed the trout's brain, Captured the lizard, salamander, shrew, 135 Crab, mice, snail, dragon-fly, minnow, and moth: Insatiate skill in water or in air Waved the scoop-net, and nothing came amiss: The while, one leaden pot of alcohol Gave an impartial tomb to all the kinds. 140 Not less the ambitious botanist sought plants, Orchis and gentian, fern and long whip-scirpus, Rosy polygonum, lake-margin's pride, Hypnum and hydnum, mushroom, sponge, and moss, Or harebell nodding in the gorge of falls. 145 Above, the eagle flew, the osprey screamed, The raven croaked, owls hooted, the woodpecker Loud hammered, and the heron rose in the swamp. As water poured through hollows of the hills To feed this wealth of lakes and rivulets, 150 So Nature shed all beauty lavishly From her redundant horn.

Lords of this realm,
Bounded by dawn and sunset, and the day
Rounded by hours where each outdid the last
In miracles of pomp, we must be proud,
As if associates of the sylvan gods.
We seemed the dwellers of the zodiac,

132. See Hawthorne's story of The Great Carbuncle.

So pure the Alpine element we breathed,
So light, so lofty pictures came and went.
We trode on air, contemned the distant town,
Its timorous ways, big trifles, and we planned
That we should build, hard-by, a spacious lodge,
And how we should come hither with our sons,
Hereafter, — willing they, and more adroit.

Hard fare, hard bed, and comic misery, —

The midge, the blue-fly, and the mosquito
Painted our necks, hands, ankles, with red bands:
But, on the second day, we heed them not,
Nay, we saluted them Auxiliaries,
Whom earlier we had chid with spiteful names.

For who defends our leafy tabernacle
From bold intrusion of the travelling crowd, —
Who but the midge, mosquito, and the fly,
Which past endurance sting the tender cit,
But which we learn to scatter with a smudge,
Or baffle by a veil, or slight by scorn?

Our foaming ale we drank from hunters' pans,
Ale, and a sup of wine. Our steward gave
Venison and trout, potatoes, beans, wheat-bread;
All ate like abbots, and, if any missed
Their wonted convenance, cheerly hid the loss
With hunters' appetite and peals of mirth.
And Stillman, our guides' guide, and Commodore,
Crusoe, Crusader, Pius Æneas, said aloud,
"Chronic dyspepsia never came from eating

183. Stillman left his own record of this excursion in a prose paper, The Subjective of It, published in The Atlantic Monthly for December, 1858. In that paper he speaks of the procession of the pines.

Food indigestible: "—then murmured some, Others applauded him who spoke the truth.

Nor doubt but visitings of graver thought Checked in these souls the turbulent heyday 'Mid all the hints and glories of the home. 190 For who can tell what sudden privacies Were sought and found, amid the hue and cry Of scholars furloughed from their tasks, and let Into this Oreads' fended Paradise. As chapels in the city's thoroughfares, 195 Whither gaunt Labor slips to wipe his brow, And meditate a moment on Heaven's rest. Judge with what sweet surprises Nature spoke To each apart, lifting her lovely shows To spiritual lessons pointed home, 200 And as through dreams in watches of the night, So through all creatures in their form and ways Some mystic hint accosts the vigilant, Not clearly voiced, but waking a new sense Inviting to new knowledge, one with old. 205 Hark to that petulant chirp! what ails the warbler? Mark his capricious ways to draw the eye. Now soar again. What wilt thou, restless bird, Seeking in that chaste blue a bluer light, Thirsting in that pure for a purer sky? 210

And presently the sky is changed; O world! What pictures and what harmonies are thine! The clouds are rich and dark, the air serene, So like the soul of me, what if 't were me? A melancholy better than all mirth. Comes the sweet sadness at the retrospect, Or at the foresight of obscurer years?

Like yon slow-sailing cloudy promontory,
Whereon the purple iris dwells in beauty
Superior to all its gaudy skirts.
And, that no day of life may lack romance,
The spiritual stars rise nightly, shedding down
A private beam into each several heart.
Daily the bending skies solicit man,
The seasons chariot him from this exile,
The rainbow hours bedeck his glowing chair,
The storm-winds urge the heavy weeks along,
Suns haste to set, that so remoter lights
Beckon the wanderer to his vaster home.

With a vermilion pencil mark the day 230 When of our little fleet three cruising skiffs Entering Big Tupper, bound for the foaming Falls Of loud Bog River, suddenly confront Two of our mates returning with swift oars. One held a printed journal waving high 235 Caught from a late-arriving traveller, Big with great news, and shouted the report For which the world had waited, now firm fact, Of the wire-cable laid beneath the sea. And landed on our coast, and pulsating 246 With ductile fire. Loud, exulting cries From boat to boat, and to the echoes round, Greet the glad miracle. Thought's new-found path Shall supplement henceforth all trodden ways, Match God's equator with a zone of art, 245 And lift man's public action to a height

239. It will be remembered that it was in August, 1858, when the first Atlantic Cable was laid and the first message transmitted, proving the feasibility of the connection, though the cable was imperfect, and a second one became necessary.

Worthy the enormous cloud of witnesses, When linkéd hemispheres attest his deed. We have few moments in the longest life Of such delight and wonder as there grew, — 250 Nor yet unsuited to that solitude: A burst of joy, as if we told the fact To ears intelligent; as if gray rock And cedar grove and cliff and lake should know This feat of wit, this triumph of mankind; 255 As if we men were talking in a vein Of sympathy so large, that ours was theirs, And a prime end of the most subtle element Were fairly reached at last. Wake, echoing caves! Bend nearer, faint day-moon! You thundertops, Let them hear well! 't is theirs as much as ours.

A spasm throbbing through the pedestals Of Alp and Andes, isle and continent, Urging astonished Chaos with a thrill To be a brain, or serve the brain of man. 265 The lightning has run masterless too long; He must to school, and learn his verb and noun, And teach his nimbleness to earn his wage, Spelling with guided tongue man's messages Shot through the weltering pit of the salt sea. 270 And yet I marked, even in the manly joy Of our great-hearted Doctor in his boat, (Perchance I erred,) a shade of discontent; Or was it for mankind a generous shame, As of a luck not quite legitimate, 275 Since fortune snatched from wit the lion's part? Was it a college pique of town and gown, As one within whose memory it burned That not academicians, but some lout,

Found ten years since the Californian gold? 280 And now, again, a hungry company Of traders, led by corporate sons of trade, Perversely borrowing from the shop the tools Of science, not from the philosophers, Had won the brightest laurel of all time. 285 'T was always thus, and will be; hand and head Are ever rivals: but, though this be swift, The other slow, - this the Prometheus, And that the Jove, — yet, howsoever hid, It was from Jove the other stole his fire, 290 And, without Jove, the good had never been. It is not Iroquois or cannibals, But ever the free race with front sublime, And these instructed by their wisest too, Who do the feat, and lift humanity. 295 Let not him mourn who best entitled was, Nay, mourn not one: let him exult, Yea, plant the tree that bears best apples, plant, And water it with wine, nor watch askance Whether thy sons or strangers eat the fruit: 300 Enough that mankind eat, and are refreshed.

We flee away from cities, but we bring
The best of cities with us, these learned classifiers,
Men knowing what they seek, armed eyes of experts.
We praise the guide, we praise the forest life:
But will we sacrifice our dear-bought lore
Of books and arts and trained experiment,
Or count the Sioux a match for Agassiz?
Oh no, not we! Witness the shout that shook
Wild Tupper Lake; witness the mute all-hail
The joyful traveller gives, when on the verge
Of craggy Indian wilderness he hears

From a log-cabin stream Beethoven's notes On the piano, played with master's hand. 'Well done!' he cries: 'the bear is kept at bay, The lynx, the rattlesnake, the flood, the fire; All the fierce enemies, ague, hunger, cold, This thin spruce roof, this clayed log-wall, This wild plantation will suffice to chase. Now speed the gay celerities of art, 320 What in the desert was impossible Within four walls is possible again, -Culture and libraries, mysteries of skill, Traditioned fame of masters, eager strife Of keen competing youths, joined or alone 225 To outdo each other and extort applause. Mind wakes a new-born giant from her sleep. Twirl the old wheels! Time takes fresh start again On for a thousand years of genius more.'

The holidays were fruitful, but must end; 330 One August evening had a cooler breath; Into each mind intruding duties crept; Under the cinders burned the fires of home: Nay, letters found us in our paradise: So in the gladness of the new event 335 We struck our camp, and left the happy hills. The fortunate star that rose on us sank not; The prodigal sunshine rested on the land, The rivers gambolled onward to the sea, And Nature, the inscrutable and mute, 340 Permitted on her infinite repose Almost a smile to steal to cheer her sons. As if one riddle of the Sphinx were guessed.

343. The Sphinx in classical mythology was a monster having a human head, a lion's body, and sometimes fabled as winged.

THE TITMOUSE.

You shall not be overbold When you deal with arctic cold, As late I found my lukewarm blood Chilled wading in the snow-choked wood. How should I fight? my foeman fine Has million arms to one of mine: East, west, for aid I looked in vain, East, west, north, south, are his domain. Miles off, three dangerous miles, is home; Must borrow his winds who there would come. 10 Up and away for life! be fleet! — The frost-king ties my fumbling feet, Sings in my ears, my hands are stones, Curdles the blood to the marble bones, Tugs at the heart-strings, numbs the sense, 15 And hems in life with narrowing fence. Well, in this broad bed lie and sleep, — The punctual stars will vigil keep, — Embalmed by purifying cold; The winds shall sing their dead-march old, 20 The snow is no ignoble shroud, The moon thy mourner, and the cloud.

It used to propose a question to the Thebans and murder all who could not guess it. The riddle was,—

"What goes on four feet, on two feet, and three, But the more feet it goes on the weaker it be?"

Œdipus gave the answer that it was man, going on four feet as a child, and when old using a staff which made the third foot. But the Sphinx's riddle in the old poetry and in the serious modern acceptation is nothing less than the whole problem of buman life.

Softly, — but this way fate was pointing,
'T was coming fast to such anointing,
When piped a tiny voice hard by,
Gay and polite, a cheerful cry,
Chic-chic-a-dee-dee! saucy note
Out of sound heart and merry throat,
As if it said, 'Good day, good sir!
Fine afternoon, old passenger!
Happy to meet you in these places,
Where January brings few faces.'

This poet, though he live apart,
Moved by his hospitable heart,
Sped, when I passed his sylvan fort,
To do the honors of his court,
As fits a feathered lord of land;
Flew near, with soft wing grazed my hand,
Hopped on the bough, then, darting low,
Prints his small impress on the snow,
Shows feats of his gymnastic play,
Head downward, clinging to the spray.

Here was this atom in full breath,
Hurling defiance at vast death;
This scrap of valor just for play
Fronts the north-wind in waistcoat gray,
As if to shame my weak behavior;
I greeted loud my little saviour,
'You pet! what dost here? and what for?
In these woods, thy small Labrador,
At this pinch, wee San Salvador!
What fire burns in that little chest
So frolic, stout and self-possest?
Henceforth I wear no stripe but thine;

Ashes and jet all hues outshine.
Why are not diamonds black and gray,
To ape thy dare-devil array?
And I affirm, the spacious North
Exists to draw thy virtue forth.
I think no virtue goes with size;
The reason of all cowardice
Is, that men are overgrown,
And, to be valiant, must come down
To the titmouse dimension.'

'T is good-will makes intelligence,
And I began to catch the sense
Of my bird's song: 'Live out of doors
In the great woods, on prairie floors.
I dine in the sun; when he sinks in the sea,
I too have a hole in a hollow tree;
And I like less when Summer beats
With stifling beams on these retreats,
Than noontide twilights which snow makes
With tempest of the blinding flakes.
For well the soul, if stout within,
Can arm impregnably the skin;
And polar frost my frame defied,
Made of the air that blows outside.'

With glad remembrance of my debt, I homeward turn; farewell, my pet! When here again thy pilgrim comes, He shall bring store of seeds and crumbs. Doubt not, so long as earth has bread, Thou first and foremost shalt be fed;

78. The titmouse's frame, made of the outer air to his fancy, — so light, free, and strong as it is, — can well defy polar frost.

The Providence that is most large 85 Takes hearts like thine in special charge. Helps who for their own need are strong, And the sky dotes on cheerful song. Henceforth I prize thy wirv chant O'er all that mass and minster vaunt: 90 For men mis-hear thy call in Spring, As 't would accost some frivolous wing, Crying out of the hazel copse, Phe-be! And, in winter, Chic-a-dee-dee! I think old Cæsar must have heard 95 In northern Gaul my dauntless bird, And, echoed in some frosty wold, Borrowed thy battle-numbers bold. And I will write our annals new, And thank thee for a better clew, 100 I. who dreamed not when I came here To find the antidote of fear. Now hear thee say in Roman key, Pæan! Veni, vidi, vici.

MONADNOC.

Thousand minstrels woke within me,

Gayest pictures rose to win me,

104. Plutarch, in his Life of Julius Cæsar, relates that, after Cæsar's victory over Pharnaces at Zela in Asia Minor, "when he gave a friend of his at Rome an account of this action, to express the promptness and rapidity of it, he used three words, I came, saw, and conquered, which in Latin having all the same cadence, carry with them a very suitable air of brevity."

· Up! — If thou knew'st who calls To twilight parks of beech and pine, High over the river intervals, Above the ploughman's highest line, Over the owner's farthest walls! Up! where the airy citadel 18 O'erlooks the surging landscape's swell! Let not unto the stones the Day Her lily and rose, her sea and land display. Read the celestial sign! Lo! the south answers to the north; 15 Bookworm, break this sloth urbane; A greater spirit bids thee forth Than the gray dreams which thee detain. Mark how the climbing Oreads Becken thee to their areades! Youth, for a moment free as they, Teach thy feet to feel the ground, Ere vet arrives the wintry day When Time thy feet has bound. Take the bounty of thy birth, 25 Taste the lordship of the earth.'

10. Any one who has stood upon the summit of Monadnoc, in Choshire County, southern New Hampshire, would feel the significance not only of the sweeing landscape's social, but of the airy citadel, since the crost of the mountain is a pinnacle of stone, built up almost like a fortress.

12. That is, let not the insensate stones be the only recipients of the splendors which the light reveals.

16. The use of unione is a recall of the first meaning of the word, which is more distinct in urban. As a city (urbs) gives politoness, arbanity, and the country (rus) gives rusticity, here the sloth urbane is the indolonce as regards nature which clings to a person too confined within city limits of interest.

I heard, and I obeyed, —
Assured that he who made the claim,
Well known, but loving not a name,
Was not to be gainsaid.

Ere yet the summoning voice was still, I turned to Cheshire's haughty hill. In his own loom's garment dressed.  Shall string Monadnoc like a bead.
 Comes that cheerful troubadour,
 This mound shall throb his face before,
 As when, with inward fires and pain,
- 272. In this bold figure the earth, with its mountains and town-sprinkled lands, is made the image of the lofty mind which dwells among the higher thoughts, and carries the mountain in its hands as a very little thing.

It rose a bubble from the plain. 290 When he cometh, I shall shed, From this wellspring in my head, Fountain-drop of spicier worth Than all vintage of the earth. There's fruit upon my barren soil 295 Costlier far than wine or oil. There 's a berry blue and gold, — Autumn-ripe, its juices hold Sparta's stoutness, Bethlehem's heart, Asia's rancor, Athens' art. 300 Slowsure Britain's secular might, And the German's inward sight. I will give my son to eat Best of Pan's immortal meat, Bread to eat, and juice to drain; 305 So the coinage of his brain Shall not be forms of stars, but stars, Nor pictures pale, but Jove and Mars. He comes, but not of that race bred Who daily climb my specular head. 310 Oft as morning wreathes my scarf, Fled the last plumule of the Dark, Pants up hither the spruce clerk From South Cove and City Wharf. I take him up my rugged sides, Half-repentant, scant of breath, — Bead-eves my granite chaos show, And my midsummer snow:

311. The scarr is the vesture of the mountain, and the light of the morning, revealing it, may be said to wind it about the mountain; or it may be the wreathing vapor.

317. I show the little clerk with his bead-eyes my granite chaos and the glittering quartz which is my midsummer snow.

He looks on that, and he turns pale. 336 'T is even so, this treacherous kite. Farm-furrowed, town-incrusted sphere, Thoughtless of its anxious freight, Plunges eyeless on forever; And he, poor parasite, Cooped in a ship he cannot steer, -Who is the captain he knows not, Port or pilot trows not, -Risk or ruin he must share. I scowl on him with my cloud, 340 With my north wind chill his blood; I lame him, clattering down the rocks; And to live he is in fear. Then, at last, I let him down Once more into his dapper town, 245

325. The small-souled man whom the mountain is jeering is bidden scan the horizon and see the immensity of the universe in which his little earth is rolling. The contrast is between the blind animal-man, overpowered by nature, and the god-like soul-man, serenely ruling nature.

Ages are thy days,
Thou grand affirmer of the present tense,
And type of permanence!
Firm ensign of the fatal Being,
Amid these coward shapes of joy and grief,
That will not bide the seeing!

Hither we bring
Our insect miseries to thy rocks;
And the whole flight, with folded wing,

Vanish beside these dedicated blocks,
Which who can tell what mason laid?
Spoils of a front none need restore,

APPENDIX.

[Lowell's poem on Agassiz presents many aspects of that remarkable man. The stimulus which he gave in this country to scientific research was followed by results in other departments of human learning, for the method employed in scientific study finds an application in history and literature also. In the study of literature the first lesson is in the power of seeing what lies before the student on the printed page, and the following sketch, which was published shortly after Agassiz's death, is given here, both because it is so entertaining an account of a student's experience, and because it points so clearly to the secret of all success in study, both of science and of literature.]

IN THE LABORATORY WITH AGASSIZ.

BY A FORMER PUPIL.

It was more than fifteen years ago that I entered the laboratory of Professor Agassiz, and told him I had enrolled my name in the scientific school as a student of natural history. He asked me a few questions about my object in coming, my antecedents generally, the mode in which I afterwards proposed to use the knowledge I might acquire, and finally, whether I wished to study any special branch. To the latter I replied that while I wished to be well grounded in all departments of zoölogy, 1 purposed to devote myself specially to insects.

"When do you wish to begin?" he asked.

"Now," I replied.

This seemed to please him, and with an energetic "Very well," he reached from a shelf a huge jar of specimens in yellow alcohol.

"Take this fish," said he, "and look at it; we call it a Hæmulon; by and by I will ask what you have seen."

With that he left me, but in a moment returned with explicit instructions as to the care of the object intrusted to me.

"No man is fit to be a naturalist," said he, "who does not know how to take care of specimens."

I was to keep the fish before me in a tin tray, and occasionally moisten the surface with alcohol from the jar, always taking care to replace the stopper tightly. Those were not the days of ground glass stoppers, and elegantly shaped exhibition jars; all the old students will recall the huge, neckless glass bottles with their leaky, wax-besmeared corks, half eaten by insects and begrimed with cellar dust. Entomology was a cleaner science than ichthyology, but the example of the professor who had unhesitatingly plunged to the bottom of the jar to produce the fish was infectious; and though this alcohol had "a very ancient and fish-like smell," I really dared not show any aversion within these sacred precincts, and treated the alcohol as though it were pure water. Still I was conscious of a passing feeling of disappointment, for gazing at a fish did not commend itself to an ardent entomologist. My friends at home, too, were annoyed, when they discovered that no amount of eau de cologne would drown the perfume which haunted me like a shadow.

In ten minutes I had seen all that could be seen in that fish, and started in search of the professor, who had, however, left the museum; and when I returned, after lingering over some of the odd animals stored in the upper apartment, my specimen was dry all over. I dashed the fluid over the fish as if to recuscitate the beast from a fainting-fit, and looked with anxiety for a return of the normal, sloppy appearance. This little excitement over, nothing was to be done but return to a steadfast gaze at my mute companion. Half an hour passed, — an hour, — another hour; the fish began to look loathsome. I turned it over and around; looked it in the face, — ghastly; from behind, beneath, above, sideways, at a three quarters' view, — just as ghastly. I was in despair; at an early hour I concluded that lunch was necessary; so, with infinite relief, the fish was carefully replaced in the jar, and for an hour I was free.

On my return, I learned that Professor Agassiz had been at the museum, but had gone and would not return for several hours. My fellow-students were too busy to be disturbed by continued conversation. Slowly I drew forth that hideous fish, and with a feeling of desperation again looked at it. I might not use a magnifying glass; instruments of all kinds were interdicted. My two hands, my two eyes, and the fish; it seemed a most limited field. I pushed my finger down its throat to feel how sharp the teeth were. I began to count the scales in the different rows until I was convinced that that was nonsense. At last a happy thought struck me—I would draw the fish; and now with surprise I began to discover new features in the creature. Just then the professor returned.

"That is right," said he; "a pencil is one of the best of eyes. I am glad to notice, too, that you keep your specimen wet and your bottle corked."

With these encouraging words, he added, -

"Well, what is it like?"

He listened attentively to my brief rehearsal of the structure of parts whose names were still unknown to me: the fringed gill-arches and movable operculum; the pores of the head, fleshy lips, and lidless eyes; the lateral line, the spinous fins, and forked tail; the compressed and arched body. When I had finished, he waited as if expecting more, and then, with an air of disappointment,—

"You have not looked very carefully; why," he continued, more earnestly, "you have n't even seen one of the most conspicuous features of the animal, which is as plainly before your eyes as the fish itself; look again, look again!" and he left me to my misery.

I was piqued; I was mortified. Still more of that wretched fish! But now I set myself to my task with a will, and discovered one new thing after another, until I saw how just the professor's criticism had been. The afternoon passed quickly and when, toward its close, the professor inquired,—

"Do you see it yet?"

"No," I replied, "I am certain I do not, but I see how little I saw before."

"That is next best," said he, earnestly, "but I won't hear you now; put away your fish and go home; perhaps you will be ready with a better answer in the morning. I will examine you before you look at the fish."

This was disconcerting; not only must I think of my fish all night, studying, without the object before me, what this unknown but most visible feature might be, but also, without reviewing my new discoveries, I must give an exact account of them the next day. I had a bad memory; so I walked home by Charles River in a distracted state, with my two perplexities.

The cordial greeting from the professor the next morning was reassuring; here was a man who seemed to be quite as anxious as I, that I should see for myself what he saw.

"Do you perhaps mean," I asked, "that the fish has symmetrical sides with paired organs?"

His thoroughly pleased, "Of course, of course!" repaid the wakeful hours of the previous night. After he had discoursed most happily and enthusiastically—as he always did—upon the importance of this point, I ventured to ask what I should do next.

"Oh, look at your fish!" he said, and left me again to my own devices. In a little more than an hour he returned and heard my new catalogue.

"That is good, that is good!" he repeated; "but that is not all; go on;" and so for three long days he placed that fish before my eyes, forbidding me to look at anything else, or to use any artificial aid. "Look, look, look," was his repeated injunction.

This was the best entomological lesson I ever had,—a lesson whose influence has extended to the details of every subsequent study; a legacy the professor has left to me, as he left it to many others, of inestimable value, which we could not buy, with which we cannot part.

A year afterwards, some of us were amusing ourselves with chalking outlandish beasts upon the museum blackboard. We drew prancing star-fishes; frogs in mortal combat; hydra-headed worms; stately crawfishes, standing on their tails, bearing aloft umbrellas; and grotesque fishes with gaping mouths and staring eyes. The professor came in shortly after, and was as amused as any at our experiments. He looked at the fishes.

"Hæmulons, every one of them," he said; "Mr. —— drew them."

True; and to this day, if I attempt a fish, I can draw nothing but Hæmulons.

The fourth day, a second fish of the same group was placed beside the first, and I was bidden to point out the resemblances and differences between the two; another and another followed, until the entire family lay before me, and a whole legion of jars covered the table and surrounding shelves; the odor had become a pleasant perfume: and even now, the sight of an old, six-inch, worm-eaten cork brings fragrant memories!

The whole group of Hæmulons was thus brought in review: and, whether engaged upon the dissection of the internal organs, the preparation and examination of the bony frame-work, or the description of the various parts, Agassiz's training in the method of observing facts and their orderly arrangement was ever accompanied by the urgent exhortation not to be content with them.

"Facts are stupid things," he would say, "until brought into connection with some general law."

At the end of eight months, it was almost with reluctance that I left these friends and turned to insects; but what I had gained by this outside experience has been of greater value than years of later investigation in my favorite groups.
